It was in this churchyard at Stoke Poges, Buckinghamshire that Thomas Gray wrote his famous elegy. Here, too—
“far from the madding crowd’s ignoble strife,” the poet rests on “the bosom of his Father and his God.”

The PURPOSE of this BOOK

TO PRESENT the reader with a systematic procedure for selecting a memorial; to submit factual information concerning the facilities, experience and reputation of the Presbrey-Leland organization and to assemble in book form a directory of more than 75,000 Presbrey-Leland patrons throughout the United States and numerous foreign countries, these constitute the three-fold purpose of this book.

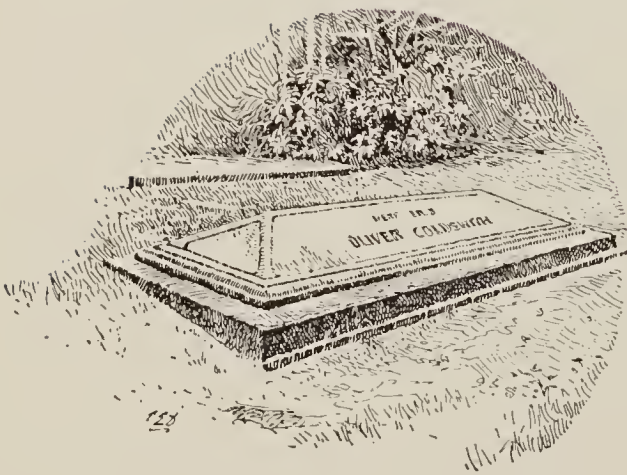

The article entitled "How to Select a Memorial" is a concise explanation of the method employed by Presbrey-Leland in leading patrons step by step to a logical and intelligent choice of a design adapted to the site, appropriation and requirements. The illustrations which accompany this article embrace examples of every current type of Memorial from the simple marker to the costly mausoleum.

In the first few pages of the book some interesting facts concerning the Presbrey-Leland organization have been assembled for the general information of the reader. Illustrations of the studios, galleries, and construction equipment are presented together with a list of well known families, architects, sculptors and institutions which the organization has served during the past half century.

The complete geographical directory of patrons has been compiled to assist the reader in locating relatives, friends, or acquaintances who have patronized Presbrey-Leland.

HOPE, LIKE THE GLEAMING TAPER'S LIGHT
ADORNS AND CHEERS OUR WAY;
AND STILL, AS DARKER GROWS THE NIGHT,
EMITS A BRIGHTER RAY.

—OLIVER GOLDSMITH

Beneath this ledger-tomb in London's "Temple Yard" sleeps the poet Goldsmith. "To relieve the wretched was his pride, and even his failings lean'd to Virtue's side."

The STUDIOS and GALLERIES of PRESBREY-LELAND

THE general offices, galleries and draughting rooms of the Presbrey-Leland organization occupy the entire tenth floor of the building situated at 681 Fifth Avenue, New York City. A permanent exhibition of original drawings, photographs and scale models of Memorials and Mausoleums is on free view in the galleries, affording the public an opportunity to study suggestions and values without the intrusion of salesmen or solicitors. The gallery is open daily, except Sunday, from 9 A.M. until 5 P.M. Saturdays until 1 P.M. Exhibits of Memorials ready for immediate placing in the cemetery are maintained at the Kensico and Woodlawn branches.

The
STUDIOS of PRESBRY-LELAND
at WOODLAWN and KENSICO

RANCH offices are located at Woodlawn and Kensico Cemeteries. Firmly committed to the policy of the parent Company, and ably managed by men of long experience in the field, these supplementary studios are conveniently accessible to residents of the area. Exhibits comprising a wide range of memorials ready for immediate placing often relieve the anxiety of delay in completing work done to order. The Woodlawn studio is located at 4241 Webster Avenue, New York 66, N. Y., facing the Bronx River Parkway at the Woodlawn Railroad Station. The Kensico studio is opposite the Kensico Cemetery Station, on the Bronx River Parkway. Both are open daily from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M.

The PRESBREY-LELAND CONSTRUCTION HEADQUARTERS

UGE derricks, a fleet of large trucks and all the modern equipment essential to efficient and economical construction work are owned and maintained by Presbrey-Leland. A corps of expert granite and marble setters are in the exclusive and permanent employ of the Company under the direction of experienced foremen and a general superintendent of construction. Leading architects and officials of cemeteries throughout the country endorse the facilities, the exacting workmanship and the personal supervision maintained by the construction department of Presbrey-Leland.

INTERESTING FACTS AND FIGURES CONCERNING PRESBREY-LELAND

OVER 75,000 Presbrey-Leland Memorials have been erected during the past half century. Over 2,500 communities in the 48 States, the District of Columbia, and numerous foreign countries are represented in the Directory of Patrons. Many hundreds of mausoleums have been erected by the Company, ranging from the smallest and simplest tomb to the largest and most elaborate private building or community mausoleum, costing well over $1,000,000.

An organization of designers and builders, Presbrey-Leland offers a comprehensive, efficient and economical service unique in the art of working stone. Presbrey-Leland memorials are created by experienced architectural designers under the supervision of the Director of Design. The modest memorial of minimum cost commands the same artistic supervision afforded the most costly project.

Presbrey-Leland service extends to all parts of the country through traveling experts associated with the Company. A perfected service by correspondence is provided to which especial attention is devoted.

Presbrey-Leland Memorials are designed and erected exclusively by the Company dealing direct with the public.

Photographs and original studies are mailed upon request.

THE COST OF PRESBREY-LELAND MEMORIALS

The foregoing data points up the need for reassurance concerning cost. Presbrey-Leland Memorials are not expensive. It is important for the public to know this. Commonly associated with the finest and most costly memorials throughout the nation, there is nevertheless no foundation for the impression that Presbrey-Leland Memorials are "high-priced." On the contrary, it is repeatedly demonstrated that the refined product of Presbrey-Leland design and execution costs no more than its commonplace counterpart. Maintenance of the most rigid standards precludes the use of second-rate materials and hurried craftsmanship; nevertheless, the legitimate economies effected in every department enable Presbrey-Leland to excel in quality at prices within the reach of all.

Intermediate profits and commissions are reduced to a minimum through the Company's policy of dealing direct with the public. A nation-wide patronage creates a large annual volume in production, resulting in the lowest-possible operating costs. By their knowledge of mechanical economies in production, Presbrey-Leland architectural designers and modelers improve results and effect low costs by resourceful design and expert detailing.

The Construction Department, see page xiv, is fully equipped with trucks, derricks, power-driven hoists, and other facilities which reduce costs to a minimum. A large crew of expert setters, retained exclusively by the Company, is under the supervision of Mr. Leo J. Legner, General Superintendent of Construction, and recognized by cemetery officials as a foremost authority on construction problems and projects.

The resources and financial responsibility of the Presbrey-Leland organization enables the Purchasing Department to take advantage of every opportunity to effect savings in the cost of materials and supplies.

The price of Presbrey-Leland Memorials is based upon accurate cost records, maintained in every department, which enable estimators to eliminate all guesswork in computing prices.

HOW TO SELECT A MEMORIAL

Foreword

HIS article, together with the classified illustrations, explains the method used by Presbrey-Leland in leading patrons step by step toward an intelligent selection of a Memorial adapted to the site, appropriation and other requirements.

FINE ART IS THAT IN WHICH THE HAND,
THE HEAD AND THE HEART GO TOGETHER.

—JOHN RUSKIN

This Anglican Cross marks the resting place of John Ruskin in the churchyard at Coniston, Lancashire. The storied carvings on the front represent his notable works: The Seven Lamps of Architecture, Stones of Venice, the Modern Painter, and Poetry.

HOW TO SELECT A MEMORIAL

THE range of design in memorial art is unlimited. Books, catalogs, pamphlets, photographs, drawings and the vast accumulation of memorials in our cemeteries present a bewildering source of ideas and suggestions. The layman rarely has any previous experience to guide him. Nor is he often versed in memorial art—a specialized branch of architectural design. All too frequently he is confused by the conflict of opinion among those who would give him counsel and suggestions.

Obviously it is not wise to make a random choice—to adopt some design that may chance for the moment to appeal; for a disappointing result cannot be corrected save at great sacrifice. Moreover, once the memorial is erected it will remain forever not only as a tribute to the commemorated but also as a symbol of the culture and good taste of those who selected the design.

Sensible to these facts, mindful of the permanent importance of his decision and confronted by an unbounded source of ideas and suggestions, the layman is prompted to ask: What is the logical, the systematic procedure to follow in selecting an appropriate memorial?

The Method

The solution of the problem lies in the fact that the millions of memorials, ancient and modern, may be grouped into but three classes according to function and into some ten types according to design.

Instead of attempting to consider the host of isolated or unclassified examples the layman should first select one class and one type for final consideration. And in selecting these there are three factors or “limitations” which largely govern his choice—the Site, Appropriation and Requirements.

It is the purpose of this article, and the classified illustrations in this book, to aid the reader step by step in selecting the class and type best adapted to the Site, Appropriation and Requirements.

I. The First Decision

According to function, all cemetery Memorials may be grouped into three major classifications: Mausoleums, Monuments and the so-called Individual Memorials such as markers, headstones and other forms designed to mark each interment as distinct from the family or central Monument. By selecting one of these major groups first, we largely reduce the range of choice at the beginning. Let us therefore consider the merits of each in proper sequence.

II. Mausoleum or Monument?

It is unnecessary to dwell upon the function of the Mausoleum or to enlarge upon the consolation it affords in eliminating the ordeal of ground interment. Suffice it to say that where the element of cost is not a burden the Mausoleum is an investment in peace of mind. Properly constructed it offers a permanent and private place of sepulchre for the family—clean, dry and sanitary. It is at once a Memorial and a utility, rich in possibilities for architectural expression, however modest it may be in size. While a philosophical attitude toward death prevails in America today, nevertheless the sense of security and protection attained by housing the sepulchres in a Mausoleum appeals to an ever-increasing public.

In deciding between a Mausoleum and a Monument the element of cost is a controlling factor in most cases. Needless to say, it is important to remember that a cheap and unsubstantial Mausoleum defeats the very purpose for which it is erected; and it is therefore a shameful waste of money and a menace to the cemetery. However inexpensive the building may be, it is of cardinal importance that no false economy be attempted in design, materials, workmanship and construction.

Such is the range in design, the variety and finish of materials, the types of construction, location and other variable factors that it is impracticable to establish any minimum figure. A two-crypt Mausoleum can be so designed that it will far exceed the cost of a building accommodating twenty.

Contrasting these approximations with the cost of Monuments—the reader can decide between a Mausoleum and some form of memorial. If the elimination of ground interment and other features of a Mausoleum appeal, then the reader should refer to the illustrations and text covering Mausoleums Pages 2-21. If a Mausoleum is not to be considered then the next step is to decide between a Family Monument and the Individual Memorial.

III. Family or Individual Memorial?

The term Individual Memorials, it will be recalled, refers to memorials designed to mark the individual interment as distinct from the central or family Monument. The distinction is important because it is here that many unhappy mistakes are made.

Contemporary practice in both cemetery landscaping and memorial design gives preference to the use of a central Monument, subordinating the stones at individual graves. This is a departure from the old custom of erecting important headstones and Monuments at each grave. In most modern cemeteries the regulations now restrict the size of Individual Memorials in the commendable effort to avoid that congestion of stonework which in the past made God's Acre resemble a stone-yard.

While sorrow and sentiment often prompt the placing of an important Individual Memorial it should be remembered that once the precedent is established on a lot, it will invariably be followed in all future interments. This means that ultimately there will be an unsightly accumulation of stone-work. Hence the desirability of a single central Monument with low and inconspicuous markers of uniform design at the graves. This plan is not only more economical in the end but is decidedly more dignified and impressive in its uniformity and harmony.

To be sure, there are exceptions in which the Individual Memorial may be featured. Where the precedent has already been established on a lot there is no alternative unless, as is often the case, the existing stone-work is replaced. Where this plan is not feasible and an Individual Memorial is necessary, care should be exercised to select a design that is harmonious with existing memorials on the lot. Still another exception applies to plots where only two or three interments are ever to be made. Here the Individual Memorial may be used without danger of excessive stone-work.

In conclusion, the dominant point to remember, in deciding between the use of Individual Memorials and a central Monument, is the ultimate appearance of the plot when all interments shall have been made. Individual Memorials are illustrated on Pages 24-37. If this form is to be adopted the reader should refer to these illustrations and to the text which accompanies them describing the various forms which the individual Memorial may take.

IV. What Type of Monument?

Assuming that the problem narrows down to the selection of a central or family Monument, the next step is to determine what type of Monument is best adapted to the site and the appropriation.

It will be recalled that all cemetery Memorials of whatsoever description, period or source, may be classified according to design into some 10 groups or types. And it is by considering these few well defined types instead of the innumerable unclassified designs, photographs and examples that we reduce the range of choice without confusion and uncertainty.

V. The Ten General Types of Cemetery Memorials

To facilitate the reader's comparison and study of types all the Monuments illustrated in this book have been grouped according to the following system of classification:

Tablets
Crosses, Cross Tablets
Sarcophagi
Pedestal Monuments, etc.
Exedrae
Screens

Obelisks
Columnar Monuments
Formal Garden Themes
(Sun-dials, Bird-baths, Vases, etc.)
Sculptured Memorials

While various examples, large and small, of each type have been used in the illustrations, nevertheless the reader should not expect to find precisely the design that may appeal. Let us again emphasize the fact that the illustrations are intended to picture types and not individual examples. For when the reader has selected one of more types for final consideration, the subsequent procedure is very simple, as hereafter explained.

VI. Factors Controlling Choice of Type

As we have observed, in selecting the type of memorial best adapted to the site and the amount to be expended there are certain factors or "limitations" which control an intelligent choice.

Important among these considerations are the appropriation, size and location of lot, number of interments to be made, character of Monuments in the vicinity, cemetery regulations governing the size and position of the Monument together with such factors as personal taste, religion (which may, for example, dictate a Cross) and some particular sentiment or association that may suggest an historic type of Memorial or some dominant symbolism.

In the effort to avoid a detailed discussion of these limitations and factors the cardinal points have been incorporated in the following series of suggestions and in the descriptions which accompany the illustrations.

VII. Suggestions for Selecting the Type of Memorial

(A) Give preference to the type that offers a contrast to Monuments in the vicinity. For example, if the memorials on adjacent lots are vertical in mass, individuality and contrast can be attained by adopting some horizontal form.

(B) Avoid types that are prevalent in the cemetery. For example, where there is a predominance of conventional sarcophagi and tablet forms—a condition common to most cemeteries—it is desirable to depart from a monotonous repetition by adopting some of the unusual themes such as the monolith, churchyard Cross, garden bench, memorial vase, pergola, stele, etc.

(C) Visibility of the Monument must be considered. Where a lot is situated well back from the roadway, with other Monuments intervening or obscuring the view, it is desirable to adopt a type that offers either sufficient height or length to be visible from the road.

(D) On hillside lots, or wherever there is a pronounced grade, it is important to avoid widespreading bases. Monoliths offer an ideal solution for such lots by eliminating the base altogether, thus avoiding the awkward effect of a high base on the low side of the lot and a buried base on the high side.

(E) Investigate any cemetery rules governing the size and location of the Monument on the lot. These rules are an important protection to you and to all lot-owners. They deserve to be respected in the letter and spirit. The Superintendent will furnish you with a diagram showing the location of present and future interments, indicating the area reserved for a Monument.

(F) Consult the Cemetery Superintendent. Remember that in most modern cemeteries the Superintendent takes pride in the landscape of which your lot is a part, and that memorials are a permanent feature of that landscape. The Superintendent will give you impartial and unbiased counsel. Often he is well versed in memorial art through constant association.

(G) Do not duplicate a Monument—particularly a Monument in the same cemetery. Imitation betrays lack of individuality and it is unfair to those who placed the original memorial. Encourage the adoption of a regulation prohibiting duplication. If some Monument in the cemetery appeals to you in design, or for some sentimental reason, use it as a basis for adaptation, not duplication.

(H) Where the Monument is to be placed in the center of a lot it is desirable to adopt some form that will not screen, obscure or minimize the importance of graves in the rear half of the plot.

(I) Remember that architectural dignity, simplicity and individuality are the essence of good design—and economy. It costs no more, often less, to adopt a design that is architecturally beautiful in proportions and correct in detail. The memorial costing less than $200 deserves the same, if not more, study than the costlier works. See to it that your advisors are trained in architectural design and that they have specialized in memorial art. Remember that the memorial is a problem in design—not a commodity. Consult designers—not salesmen.

(J) Avoid ultra-modern styles of ornament and novel effects. While it is not necessary to make a fetish of the historic styles, nevertheless it is wise to observe the unimproved traditions of the Classic, Renaissance and Gothic, however inexpensive the memorial may be.

(K) Communicants of the Roman, Anglican and Lutheran Churches—in which the Cross is a dominant symbol—should consider the Cross and Cross tablet in selecting a type. Indeed, the Cross is properly taking its place among the most favored of memorial forms regardless of Christian denomination.

(L) Avoid the so-called rock-face surface. It is an artificial finish, neither artistic nor naturalistic. If the natural beauty of rugged unhewn rock appeals, it is better to use a field boulder and one untouched by the chisel.

(M) Avoid mere bulk of stone. It is better taste to err on the side of restraint than it is to burden the lot with a massive Monument. A simple classic stele can be more expressive and beautiful than a ponderous obelisk. Our cemeteries need more art—less stone.

(N) Do not select the material before selecting the design. Too often the curious notion prevails that some single brand of stone surpasses all other materials Nature has given us. Tests conducted by the U. S. Bureau of Standards and the U. S. Geological Survey are more scientific, convincing and unbiased than the sales-talk of those who confuse memorial art with the business of selling "granite." There are many good granites and good marbles. When the design has been adopted a material should be selected that will best interpret the design in texture color and technique.

(O) If the cemetery regulations permit planting on the lot, a reasonable sum for evergreens should be included in the amount appropriated for the Memorial. Shrubs enhance the beauty of the stone-work and give an effective setting for the memorial. Consult the Cemetery Superintendent on this important feature.

(P) It is desirable to use only the family name on the central Monument, placing full inscriptions on the individual markers at each grave. This method, now generally followed, avoids many awkward situations, and eliminates all danger of any accident or costly mistake in carving future inscriptions.

VIII. Selecting the Type of Memorial

The reader should now turn to the illustrations beginning on Pages 40-125. These illustrations, it will be recalled, are classified according to type—tablets, Crosses, sarcophagi and so on. It is desirable first to proceed through the entire set of types, thus acquiring a general idea of the range in design and characteristics. Read the descriptive text carefully. These descriptions will often serve to reduce the range of choice by explaining the dominant features of each type. For example, sarcophagi and obelisks are essentially massive; the tablet forms are slender and graceful; the so-called garden themes are a departure from the funereal and in harmony with the modern cemetery landscape; Crosses are significant—and so each type has a peculiar characteristic which will influence the choice.

In comparing the types illustrated remember that it is the mass—the essential form and not the detail—that is important at this stage. Moreover only a limited number of examples can be shown of each type.

After proceeding through the entire set of types in order repeat the process, this time noting the type or types that most appeal.

IX. After Selecting the Type

When the type or types have thus been selected the reader is prepared to consider individual examples—to study the range of design in a given type. To facilitate this study Presbrey-Leland will mail a “Portfolio of Original Photographs” illustrating a variety of memorials in each group or type. The reader should write for portfolios illustrating the type or types he has selected. In writing for the photographs it is desirable to mention the size of the plot and to give any particulars that may be helpful in selecting photographs illustrating examples best adapted to the requirements. These portfolios are mailed upon request. There is no obligation except to return the photographs when they have served their purpose.

X. The Portfolio of Photographs

From the various examples of a given type, illustrated in the Portfolio of Photographs, the reader should select those that most appeal. Here again the reader should not expect to find precisely the design that will meet all the requirements. Often some feature in one example and some detail in another may need to be combined and adapted. Again, certain effects not shown on any of the photographs may be desired. Hence the importance of original sketches which incorporate the required elements and likewise illustrate the proportions and detail possible to obtain for a given expenditure.

XI. The Final Step

After considering and selecting the photographs in the Portfolio the reader should return them with comments. These comments will aid the designers in preparing tentative sketches which are submitted with accurate dimensions and estimates, incorporating the requirements and adapting the features, details and qualities that the reader has selected.

Thus the final design represents the culmination of a systematic and logical study of the Memorial as a problem in design.

Free Advisory Service

The procedure described above involves no obligation. It is part of the extensive service Presbrey-Leland has maintained for more than a half century. Moreover, it is contrary to the Company's policy to "follow up" inquiries with persistent or importunate attempts to urge the Company's services in any manner.

Mindful of these facts, the reader is invited to take every advantage of the Free Advisory Service maintained by Presbrey-Leland. The staff of designers, familiar with cemeteries in many parts of the country, will give prompt consideration and reply to all inquiries for advice and suggestions in both selecting a type best adapted to the site or in developing a final design.

Personal Service

Needless to observe, the selection of a design can be greatly facilitated by consulting a designer-representative of the Company in person. It will be seen, from the directory of Presbrey-Leland patrons in this book, that the Company's service extends throughout the United States and that representatives of the organization are of necessity frequently traveling over many sections, particularly East of the Mississippi. Hence it is possible in most cases for the Company to offer the personal services of a designer-representative. In a single conference, after inspecting the site, one of these trained representatives can leave preliminary data and suggestions of invaluable importance. Readers are invited to take advantage of this service which is available with reasonable promptness and without obligation.

MAUSOLEUMS
SEPULCHRAL SARCOPHAGI
COLUMBARIUMS
SIDE-HILL VAULTS
LEDGER-TOMBS

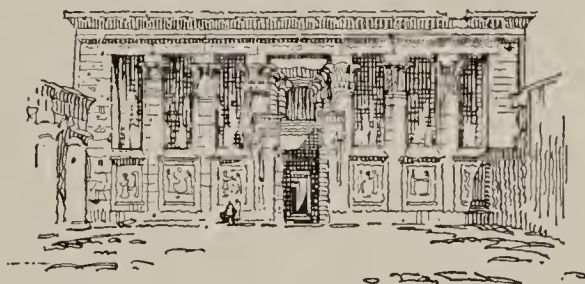

Not until bereavement comes to us can we fully appreciate what consolation a family mausoleum can bring in the hour of sorrow. Eliminating the ordeal of earth interment, these structures provide a beautiful, permanent and private place of sepulture. One of the finest works of Presbrey-Leland, the Walter P. Chrysler tomb eloquently demonstrates the potentialities of the Greek Doric Order when entrusted to those adequately versed in the art of classic composition and detail. A masterpiece of construction, the building comprises an amazingly few stones, including the huge monolithic capstone, measuring 32'-7" long, 12'-4" wide, and 1'-4" thick. PL35530 for Walter P. Chrysler.

MAUSOLEUMS, SEPULCHRAL SARCOPHAGI AND COLUMBARIUMS

MAUSOLEUMS, as the name implies, are planned to provide a place of sepulture. They range in design from simple noncolumnar buildings, with rough hewn surfaces, to imposing adaptations of the Greek temple. A few typical examples are here illustrated together with underground tombs, columbariums and sepulchral sarcophagi. On page xxi, in the article "How to Select a Memorial," the reader will find some important observations on the function and cost of mausoleums. It is obviously impossible to here discuss the architectural and practical aspects of mausoleum design and the reader is invited to write for a Portfolio of Photographs and detailed information.

The Temple at Edfu typifies the solemnity and ponderous solidity of Egyptian architecture.

"Earth proudly wears the Parthenon
As the best gem of her zone."

Throughout the ages Greek architecture has remained unsurpassed for refinement of line and detail. The Doric temple distyle in antis,—so-called when the side walls extend to flank two columns—is a favored prototype for the mausoleum of Classic source and the building here shown is an outstanding adaptation of this form. PL26344 designed and erected for John H. Feldscher, Esq., of New York City.

TEMPLE FORM—GREEK DORIC IN ANTIS AND IONIC PROSTYLE

In the Ionic Order the Greeks achieved a supreme expression of refined elegance. Singularly, this style reached its highest development in the famous Tomb of Mausolus at Halicarnassus, from which the word “mausoleum” is derived. The mausoleum here shown recalls the Ionic Temple of Nike Apteros in Athens, which was designed by Calliocrates, architect of the Parthenon. PC5522 for Jasper A. Campbell, Esq., New York City.

The imposing William Rockefeller Mausoleum is one of the outstanding monuments of modern architecture. Designed by Welles Bosworth, the structure with its engaged Ionic columns, enormous monolithic wall stones and the pyramidal roof is a notable example of the square plan in a structure of superb classic design. PC8295, erected for William Rockefeller, Tarrytown, New York.

SQUARE FORM—STEPPED ROOF IONIC
AND CORINTHIAN

The Kress family burial plot is one of the most imposing in New York's famed Woodlawn Cemetery. A building of grand scale and proportion, this mausoleum demonstrates what can be achieved in applying the superb detail of the Corinthian Order to a structure in which no one of the few traditional Classic plans has been slavishly followed. Situated on the crest of a knoll, and nestled in a setting of nature's splendor, this sanctuary can hardly fail to stir one's emotions—a picture exquisitely blending the works of God and man. PL20800 for S. H. and R. H. Kress, of New York City. Theodore E. Blake, Architect.

Many atrocities are committed in the name of modern art. Extreme and often childish attempts to achieve distinction at the expense of good taste and refinement, have imputed an unenviable savor to the modern school of design. Notable as an exception to this trend is the Lehman mausoleum, expressing magnificent restraint, through the expert combination of mass and proportion. Almost severely conservative, the interesting treatment of the recessed doorway and the delicate dentil course at the cornice, are the only elements of relief in this impressive facade. PL34497 for Philip Lehman, of New York City.

MAUSOLEUMS OF OBLONG PLAN—MODERN DETAIL

Presbrey-Leland gratefully acknowledges the marked tendency of leading architects to engage their services. Here, the eminent firm of Shreve, Lamb and Harmon has created the superb design for the late Adolph S. Ochs, Esquire. Bearing virtually no recollection of Classic detail, a course ordinarily pursued in modern architecture, the Ochs mausoleum suggests a wholly present-day spirit—a most welcome and refreshing departure from traditional forms. Note the finesse with which Presbrey-Leland craftsmen have interpreted the artist's exacting emphasis upon detail. PL30120 for Adolph S. Ochs.

Comment upon the Ochs mausoleum illustrated on the preceding page may well be applied to this stately building to an even greater degree. No suggestion of any traditional prototype has been injected into the form of the expressly contemporary structure. The eight huge panels eliminate the conventional ashlar construction, even to the point of carving the doorway integrally from the forewall. Appreciably more difficult and somewhat more costly to produce, this expedient not only tends to keep the sidewalls freer from objectionable streaking, but affords the maximum assurance of permanent construction. PL36906 for John Polachek, New York. Bloch & Hess, Architects.

MAUSOLEUMS OCTAGONAL PLAN MODERN AND CLASSIC

This mausoleum was adapted from the famed Tower of the Winds in Athens (erected B.C. 110-35), and known as the Horologium of Andronikos Cyrrhestes who reared the structure to measure time by means of a water-clock or clepsydra, installed in the structure, and a sun dial inscribed on the exterior. Designed by the late Horace Trumbauer, Architect, this mausoleum is a magnificent adaptation of an outstanding example of the octagonal plan in architectural design. PL29150 for Edward J. Berwind, Esq., of Philadelphia, Pa.

Another departure from the classic norm, the Coe family mausoleum at Cold Spring Harbor, demonstrates the unlimited possibilities in plan, form, and detail. Four porticos project from the main naos, resulting in a cruciform plan, definitely not traditional, while the supporting columns, crowned with the graceful Tower-of-the-Winds capitals, impart a marked classic flavor. It may be observed that the original Tower-of-the-Winds at Athens used the column from which the distinguishing term is derived, albeit the adaptation on the preceding page was designed with a simple, uncoluminated portal. PL23445 for William R. Coe, Esq., Walker & Gillette, Architects.

MAUSOLEUMS IN THE MODIFIED CLASSIC AND MODERN ARCHITECTURE

Repose, dignity, permanence and solidity are expressed in the design of this mausoleum by Presbrey-Leland. It has been acclaimed an ideal example of mausoleum design in the Modern architecture because it so definitely expresses the purpose or function of the structure—a cardinal tenet or principle of the Modern school. An appealing tonal effect lends further distinction to this mausoleum. The walls are done in the warm Carolina Pink granite, the portal pilasters in dark green polished granite from Minnesota. PL33175 for George F. Dieterle, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio.

One of the most imposing mausoleums erected in recent years, this impressive structure by Presbrey-Leland features the monumental dignity and simplicity of the Modern or Contemporary architecture. A welcome departure from the monotonous repetition of the Classic styles, the Modern architecture has been accepted by the foremost architects of our time. It is admirably adapted to monolithic construction. PL 29870 designed and erected for Clarence H. Geist, Esq., of Philadelphia, Pa.

MAUSOLEUMS OF OBLONG PLAN MODERN AND CLASSIC DETAIL

Another departure from conventional mausoleum design is attained by placing the portal on the long side of an oblong building, thus utilizing the expansive wall for an impressive facade. Massive blocks of stone, a studied simplicity and the artistic Ionic colonnade here attain that monumental quality so desirable in mausoleum design. PL28170, one of two mausoleums designed and erected for the family of John T. Dorrance of Radnor, Pa.

Most of the mausoleums in our cemeteries today are conventional—and too often stereotyped—adaptations of the pagan temples of ancient Greece and Rome. Hence it is that individuality and spiritual significance can be attained by adopting the Gothic style which is so rich in beautiful architectural detail. Here the buttresses and a simple door successfully Gothicize a simple but distinctive mausoleum. PL26730 designed and erected for William F. Sauter, Esq., of Ventnor, New Jersey.

MAUSOLEUMS— GOTHICIZED AND GOTHIC

Especially in an era of relatively high costs, economy often prompts a natural reluctance to consider the Gothic style. Where cost is not a primary concern, there is a wealth of possibilities in this the most charming and appropriate of all orders for ecclesiastical architecture. Through traditional use for churches and cathedrals, the association of Gothic forms with things spiritual is inevitable—surely no deterrent to their adoption for a place of sepulture. Note the nicely detailed spire, an authentic feature of the traditionally asymmetric facade, the rose window perforating the forewall into the clerestory, and the typically moulded door frame—perhaps the most distinguishing element of the Gothic concept. PL27390 for William H. Hibbs, Washington, D. C. Frederick H. Brooke, Architect.

It is both interesting and reassuring that Mr. Paul Whiteman, eminent in the world of music and entertainment, has provided this charming tomb of Gothic source in the delightful setting of quiet, rural Ewing Church Cemetery as a final resting place for his family—reflecting the force of the sober contention that an investment in proper respect for the departed is not barbaric nor imprudent, but symbolic of a phase of civilization that may be losing its rightful position in a world beset with the evils of materialism. Suggesting a quaint chapel, the Whiteman mausoleum bespeaks the utmost in modest refinement. PL38312 for Paul Whiteman.

GOTHIC MAUSOLEUMS

Not unlike the Whiteman mausoleum in spirit, the George H. Jones family tomb illustrates effectively the degree to which examples of a single design category can vary in detail. The resourcefulness found in the personnel of the Presbrey-Leland staff of design is reflected again and again where the prospective purchaser is captivated by a former production and is reluctant to "take chances" with any departure from the original. There is a constant vigil against plagiarism, one of the real misfortunes of the memorial field. Attention is called to the Crosses surmounting the ridge—complementary but not identical. PL25948 for Mrs. George H. Jones.

It is conceivable that a challenge might be directed toward the inclusion of this mausoleum as a member of the Gothic family. Actually its spirit is typical of the Romanesque—a transitory but highly developed order following and influenced by the Classic and Byzantine, and preceding and merging into the Gothic. Romanesque architecture is often referred to as “round Gothic,” because of the use of the round arch instead of the pointed arch or “ogive.” The exquisite carving of the adoring angels in the semicircular spandrel over the portal was modelled by the celebrated Rene Chambellan. PL31850 for Mrs. John D. Ryan, of New York City.

MAUSOLEUMS ROUND GOTHIC AND GOTHIC DETAIL

Reference is made on page 10 to the relatively high cost of employing Gothic architecture. True enough, the structure there illustrated, and many other fine Presbrey-Leland productions, involve investments beyond the reach of the great majority. Here, resort is taken to an expedient warranting the full approval of good designers. The simple, rectangular plan forms the basis for this finely conceived building. Gothic only as to detail, it gives eloquent expression to the spirit of the Tudor Gothic, so prevalent in the later application of Gothic forms to the charming and widespread residential architecture of England. PL26288 for Mrs. M. McBride, of Boston.

Reflecting Georgian influence, the mausoleum here illustrated again emphasizes the limitless possibilities of the resourceful designer. Tracing back directly to the Classic period, Colonial architecture finds its heritage confined chiefly to the application of crisp, delicate ornament to Church and residential structures. A marked note of refinement has been imparted to this facade, made possible in part by the selection of a uniform fine-grained granite in which to express the desired delicacy. PL45602 for Generoso Pope, of New York.

MAUSOLEUMS—SQUARE AND RECTANGULAR PLAN

Any organization professing to specialize in good design must be able to demonstrate its versatility in resolving each challenge to the best advantage. Here, in making provision for but the two desired sarcophagi, Presbrey-Leland chose to suggest a plan in which the twin tombs are situated in the center of an open and spacious area, surrounded on four sides by an ambulatory of ample width. Three art glass windows and the exquisitely modelled portal tend to dispel the atmosphere of gloom that so often attends the visit to the family mausoleum. PL25255 for the Estate of Paul Smith, Jr., of Paul Smiths, New York.

Many are confronted with the difficulty of appropriating adequate funds for the mausoleum they so earnestly desire. Here Presbrey-Leland has demonstrated that the most rigid economy need not work an architectural hardship. Simplicity in itself deserves no censure. But the simpler the design, the more essential to entrust it to those who understand composition. Note how effective is the Oppenheim mausoleum which relies upon good proportion, excellent workmanship, and the minor but essential detail and placement of the family name. The monolithic roofstone is typical of the sturdy and lasting construction. PL 34507 for Beulah S. Oppenheim, of New York City.

MAUSOLEUMS OF MODERATE COST

In a spirit similar to that of the mausoleum shown above, Presbrey-Leland has admirably exemplified the possibilities of conservative design. Rough-hewn, save for the entrance treads and the door frame, the Dominick mausoleum reflects the native tomb-like character for which many architects strive, maintaining that the very appearance of a structure should proclaim its purpose. The unfinished stone, known as "rock-face," usually adopted because of a slight economy of production, can and should be treated artistically. Too often it is left objectionably jagged or defaced with tool-marks. PL33705 for Gayler G. Dominick, of New York City.

It is granted that the finesse of an expert designer is sometimes wasted on the unappreciative. To a reassuring majority, however, his extra talent and effort pay rich dividends in satisfaction. To some, imperceptible but vital refinements are felt immediately. To others, such attributes register subconsciously causing a reaction they often cannot explain, but which grows ever more poignant. Compare the facade of this mausoleum with many similar but unstudied designs. The gentle slope or "batter" of the sidewalls, the slight flare of the roofstone, the symmetrical composition of the doorway—these have brought order and rhythm into an otherwise commonplace design. PL43448 for Dr. Otto B. May, South Orange, N. J.

MAUSOLEUMS—CONTEMPORARY DESIGN

A symphony of good composition, the Bopf family mausoleum reflects the satisfying refinement typical of Presbrey-Leland design. Employing little more than the minimum of ornament, the picture is one of quiet richness. Many question the desirability of urns. Indeed, Presbrey-Leland is inclined to discourage the use of vases designed to receive planting, for practical reasons. But urns can be used for decorative purposes when properly correlated. Note the scale given the building by the restricted height of the horizontal urns. PL36990 for the Estate of Arthur P. Bopf of Elizabeth, N. J.

The sarcophagus of antiquity was always used for actual entombment. Here in America, we often adopt the form of the sarcophagus to the monument as a purely commemorative feature. However, the sepulchral sarcophagus may take the place of a mausoleum when only two, or rarely three, interments are required. The cost of a well designed tomb of this nature is often nearly or quite as great as that of a small mausoleum. Nevertheless, its virtual indestructibility is a source of strong appeal to some, while others maintain that it affords superior esthetic opportunities. The Holton memorial is a most capably designed example. PL32490 for John S. W. Holton, of Merion, Pa.

SEPULCHRAL SARCOPHAGI— MODERN AND CLASSIC SOURCE

Etymology affords us a liberal interpretation of the term "sarcophagus," as an "enclosure for the remains." Derived from the Greek, it is fitting to adopt the Classic detail for enriching the sarcophagus form. The Latham memorial is a handsome example. As may be obvious, the loculi are arranged side by side,—a nice expression of sentiment when providing for husband and wife. PL23746 for R. G. Latham, New York City.

The sarcophagus, like any other form of memorial, can be planned without regard for cost, and with the desired features, both practical and esthetic, determining the final selection. Obviously, however, the majority are obliged to take cost into account to a greater or less degree. Here the loculi are arranged vertically, economizing materially on granite and foundation. Simplicity of design, with the effective but inexpensive stencil ornament of Egyptian source, also contributes to the production of a most reasonably priced tomb, affording all the lasting security of the more costly projects. PL25449 for the Estate of Louis Bry, Long Branch, N. J.

SEPULCHRAL SARCOPHAGI— EGYPTIAN AND GOTHIC SOURCE

Another example of the double sarcophagus providing the loculi arranged side by side, the Keeler memorial demonstrates how effectively Gothic detail can be applied to the otherwise severe mass. Not even has the choice of character for the family name been overlooked. Access to the tomb for future interment is gained through the temporary removal of the monolithic capstone. Although requiring special equipment, the procedure is achieved easily by the construction crews of Presbrey-Leland. This service is readily available. PL46856 for Louis V. Keeler, of Montclair, N. J.

Cremation as a form of reposition has gained some recognition during the past half century. Reluctant to place the cinerary urn in the earth, some prefer to make provision for ashes in a monument designed for the purpose. Almost any one of the ten types in which memorials are classified, can be adapted satisfactorily to this function. Here a beautifully detailed urn provides a compartment for several interments, the capstone being removable from the lower drum. The severe benches and tasteful planting complete the ensemble. PL34892 for Dr. Adolph Scheurer, of New York City.

COLUMBARIA— MONUMENTAL AND VESTIBULAR

The Columbarium may take the form of a small mausoleum in which niches line the walls in place of crypts or loculi. Sometimes the structure is large enough to accommodate only one tier of niches protected by a bronze door with plate glass. The example here shown is one of the mausoleum type with a sizeable naos or chamber. Gothic decoration is used and the door is beautifully modelled. PL19347 for Mrs. S. Guggenheim in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

The illustration on the page opposite bears little resemblance to the more conservative Vogel memorial. Yet each serves the function of providing a repository for cinerary urns. In this beautifully conceived example, the stately tablet is recessed to form a niche, enclosed by a chaste bronze plaque secured by concealed hinges and lock. The buttress blocks flanking the introductory step contribute to the effective composition and, as well, are designed to serve as benches. PL35180 for the Estate of Martin Vogel. Taylor and Levi, architects.

COLUMBARIA— MODERN STYLE

Though appreciably smaller than the conventional mausoleum, the Glassford columbarium affords a vestibule of ample dimensions. Provision for the ashes takes the form of a small altar-like structure beneath the art glass window at the rear, and consumes little of the interior area. Departing from the more traditional Gothic spirit exemplified in the Guggenheim memorial at the left, this building and the bronze door admirably illustrate the simplicity of the Modern architecture. There are but six pieces of stone in the entire exterior construction. PL32379 for S. Robert Glassford, Esq., Ridgewood, N. J.

The mausoleum here illustrated, for want of a better term, has sometimes been referred to as a "vaultette". Affording all the features of lasting security, it nevertheless must omit the vestibule or naos, permitted by the plan of larger buildings, between the tiers of crypts. It is frankly designed to provide for the required catacombs (which cannot exceed three in number) at a minimum cost. Allowance for a vestibule of restricted area can be made, however, between the catacomb fronts and the door, as was done in this instance. PL31025 for John A. Dunbar, of New York City.

THE SMALL MAUSOLEUM AND SIDE-HILL VAULT

Where the site is characterized by a pronounced slope from front to rear, the so-called "side-hill vault" may be a practical solution. Much of the rear portion of the structure is built underground and of concrete. The modern practice of integrally waterproofing the concrete eases the former limitation of these buildings and assures the protection upon which it is so natural and proper to insist. PL24711 designed and erected for C. F. Sauer, Jr., of Richmond, Va.

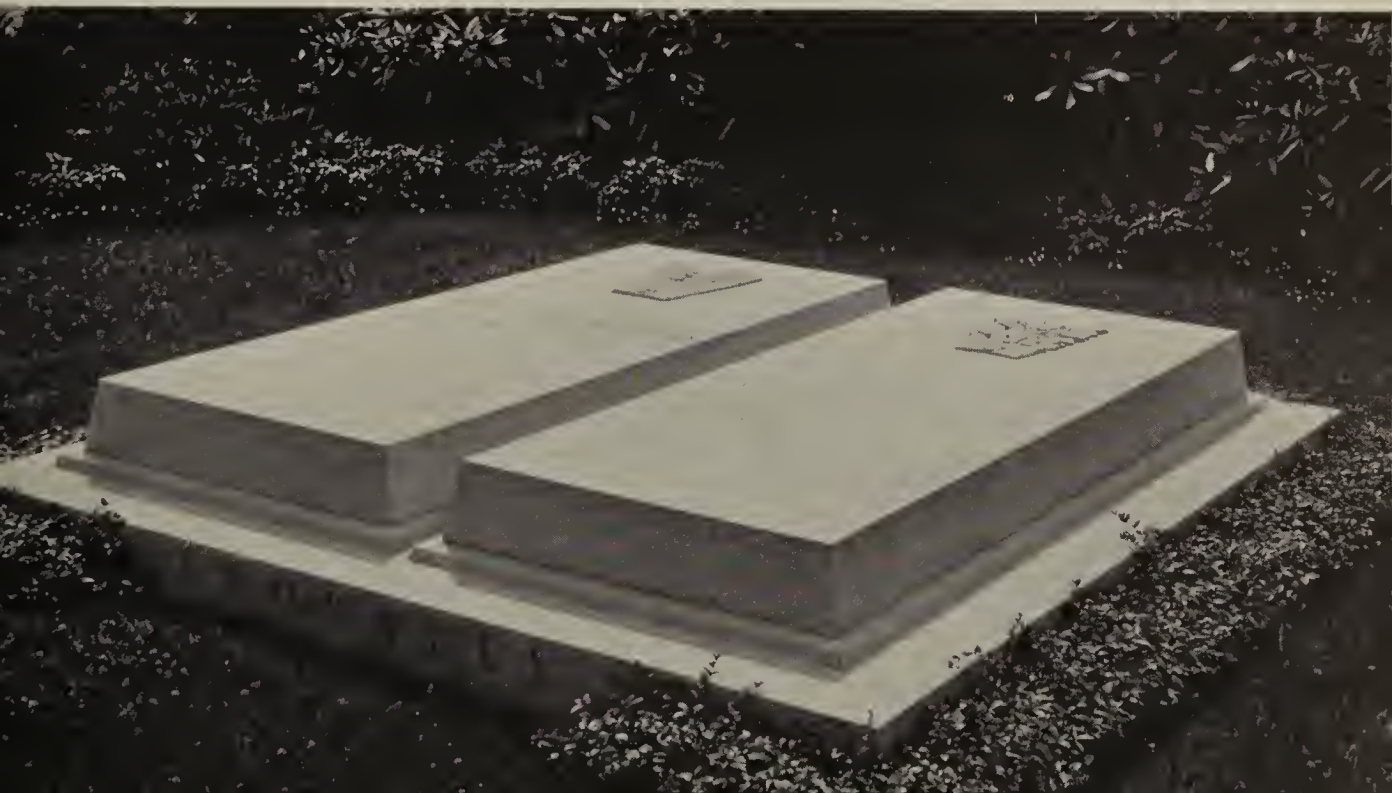

Underground vaults or tombs covered with granite ledger stones are extensively used in some sections of the country, notably in Philadelphia and vicinity. Tombs of this type known as caemetaria were extensively used in ancient Rome. The concrete subterranean structure of these tombs is not unlike the interior of a mausoleum, often lined with marble and accommodating any number of crypts or loculi. The removable ledger stone rests on a base through which an opening gives access to the loculi below. PL33282 for Mrs. Howard S. Monroe, Germantown, Pa.

THE SUBTERRANEAN VAULT OR LEDGER-TOMB

Here, unlike the example above, the base is perforated dually, with twin ledger-slabs sealing the single and segregated compartments beneath. Quiet, restful, lovely, this tomb is a singularly fitting memorial for husband and wife. The exquisitely carved emblems are of Christian origin,—the Pelican-in-Her-Piety at the left and the Cross and Orb at the right. The former suggests the Lord's Atonement through the martyrdom of the mother pelican; the latter, the triumph of our Saviour over the sin of the world. PL34260 for Harvey M. Voorhees, Trenton, N. J.

PRESBREY-LELAND
MEMORIALS CLASSIFIED
ACCORDING TO
FUNCTION AND DESIGN

PART II
THE INDIVIDUAL MEMORIAL

HEADSTONES
MARKERS
LEDGER-STONES

It has been well said that the spirit of our forefathers speaks to us from the quaint and oftentimes beautiful headstones in Colonial churchyards and burial grounds. To this day, designers find inspiration in the exquisite lettering and decoration of these early stones. In the example here illustrated, Presbrey-Leland designers, sculptors and carvers have collaborated in creating a superb adaptation of the Colonial headstone. Note the singular beauty of the carving. PL30534 for Samuel Strauss, Esq., of Katonah, New York.

THE INDIVIDUAL MEMORIAL

HEADSTONES, MARKERS, LEDGER-STONES

HE memorials illustrated in this group are designed to mark each interment as distinct from the central or family monument. It is highly important that the reader should refer to page xxiv of the article entitled "How to Select a Memorial" before deciding upon a memorial of this type. Suffice it here to repeat the warning that extreme caution should be exercised to avoid over-crowding the plot with important memorials at each grave. Contemporary practice gives preference to a central monument with very simple markers of uniform design for the individual interments—a plan that effects impressive unity and eventual economy. Important individual memorials are best used when only a few interments are to be made on a lot with no central family monument.

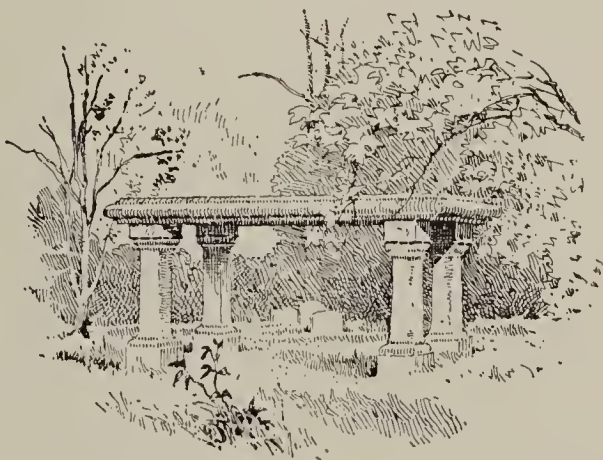

Celtic headstone
Cross at Glenda-
lough, Ireland.

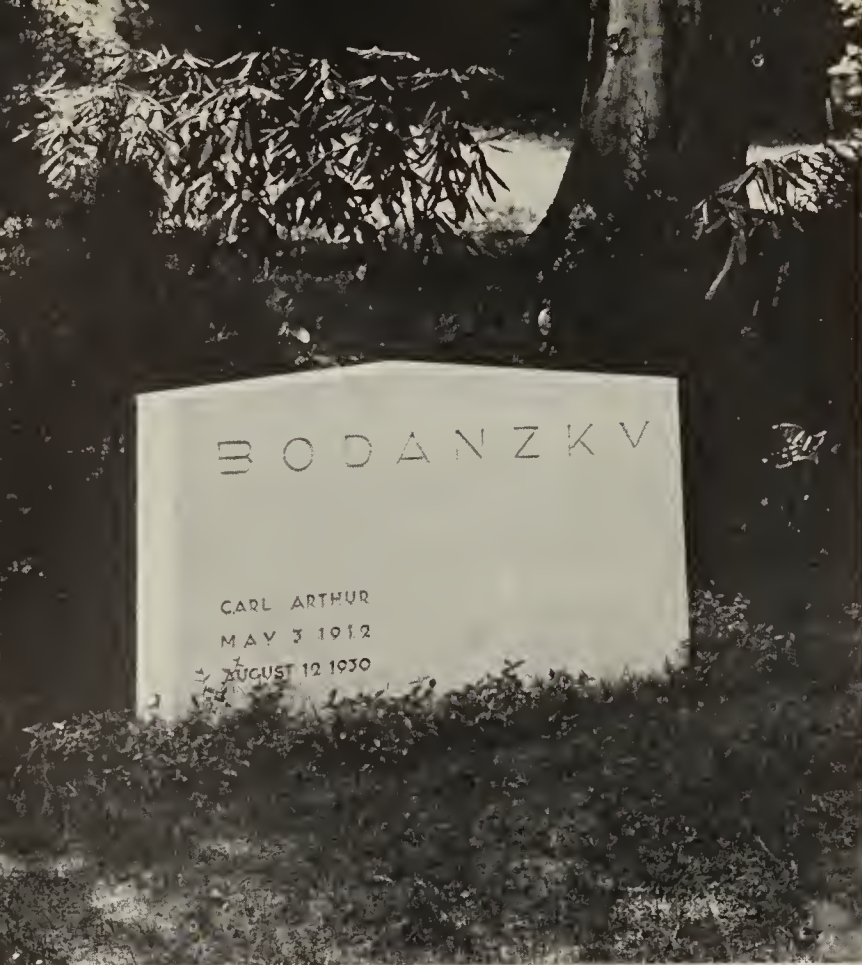

Ancient Celtic grave Cross in Wales.

Colonial headstone of John Grosvenor
Roxbury, Massachusetts.

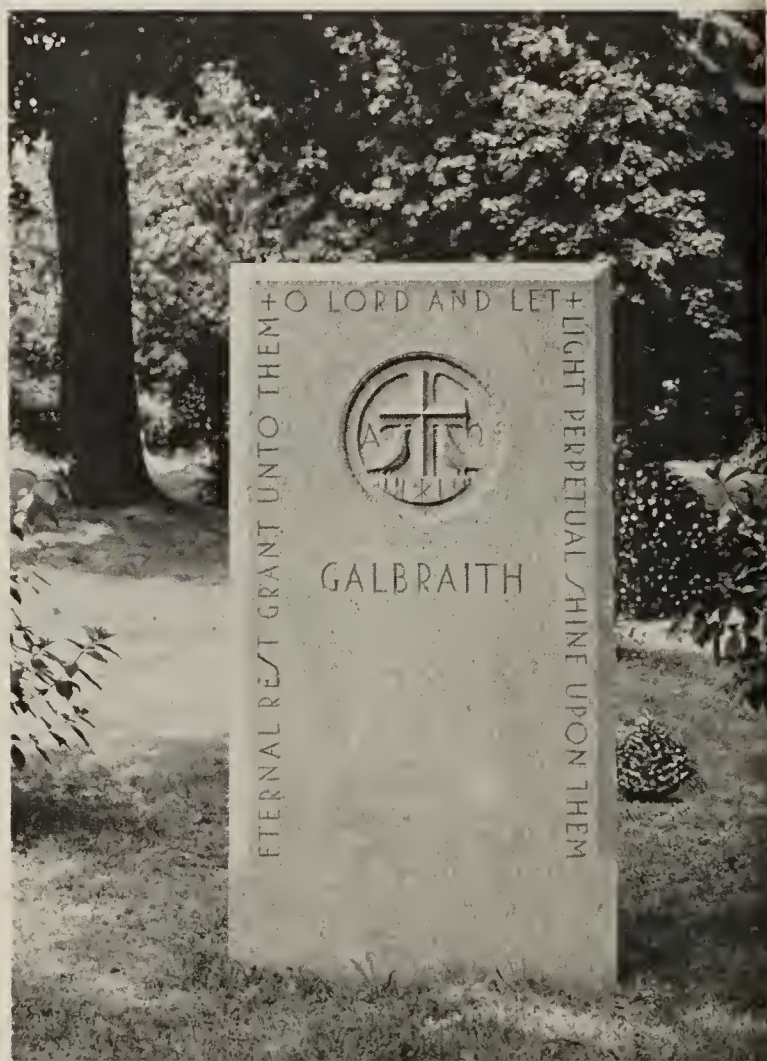

Colonial table-tomb in Center Street Burial Ground
Newton, Massachusetts.

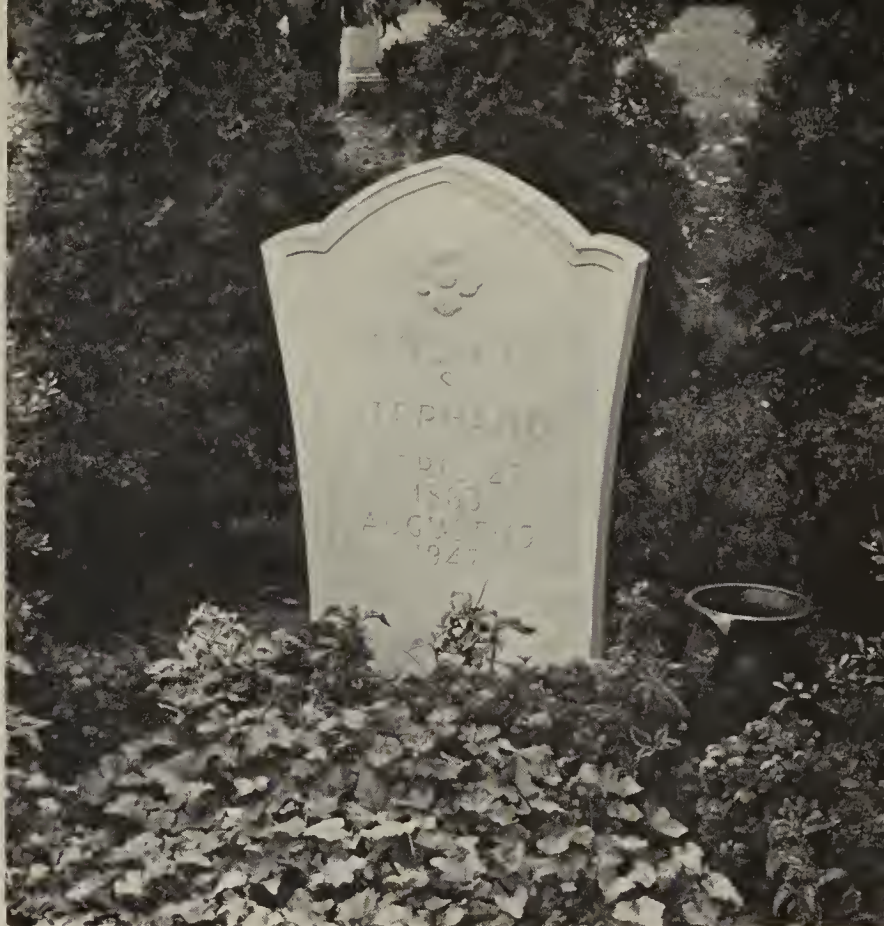

Family memorials of the Tablet type may be utilized as double headstones by so positioning the memorial that the names appear at the head of each interment, thus eliminating the use of markers or footstones. This monolithic family headstone, PL27829, was designed and erected for the eminent conductor Artur Bodanzky of New York.

THE HEADSTONE— HORIZONTAL AND VERTICAL

Presbrey-Leland designer-representatives have often reflected upon the frequency with which they hear expressed the desire for "just a plain stone with the name." Simplicity is a virtue in the arts as in other walks of life, but how much nicer to inject a note of personal or religious significance,—guarding of course against an over-display of sentiment. Here the beautiful words from the Scripture, decoratively applied, epitomize the touching spirit in which this tribute was dedicated. PL32049 for Mrs. Russell A. Cowles, of New York City.

This individual memorial demonstrates eloquently the success with which marked departures from the conventional can be held within the bounds of taste and refinement. A gem intrinsically, it evokes even greater appreciation when considered in conjunction with the large Stephano Cross appearing on page 73, which it was designed to accompany. PL47135 for Constantine S. Stephano, of Philadelphia.

COMPANION PIECE AND PERSONALIZED HEADSTONE

Occasions are found in which a memorial of somewhat greater scale than the typical headstone is appropriate for an individual. Pretense is in no sense a criterion, and the elements of proportion must too be given consideration. Here the unique and significant memorial to the late Howard Jacoby, eminent in the field of astronomy, bears the signs of the zodiac and a representation of the planet Saturn, on which subject Mr. Jacoby conducted a noted research. The height of more than six feet is appropriate in the light of the slender proportions. PL29963 for Mrs. Harold Jacoby, of Westport, Conn.

THE HEADSTONE— COLONIAL VARIANTS

On plots accommodating but one or two interments, the monolithic headstone is an ideal memorial. Designed by nature to serve as a personal tribute, it can nevertheless be inscribed for two or more, but often husband and wife. Note the artist's finesse in using an unusual, but conservative and attractive silhouette, and the modelled Cross Alisée Patée, a nicely treated feature. PL24306 for W. W. Cunningham, of New York, N. Y.

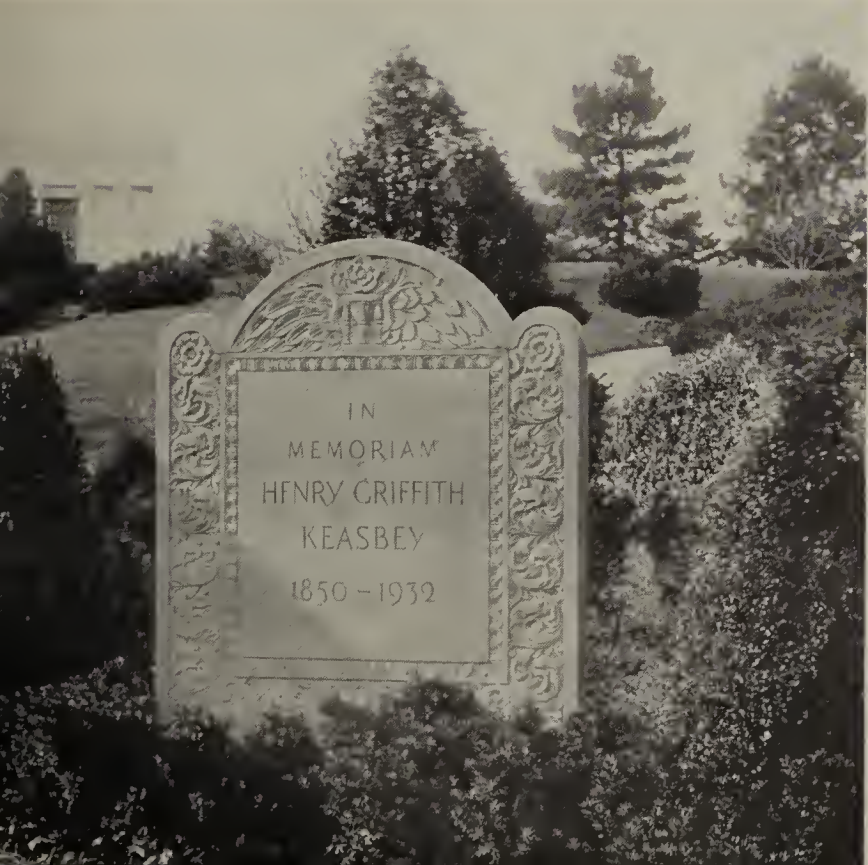

The Reynolds memorial has attracted many who wish to express a fitting and adequate sentiment in the most unpretentious way. Typical of the more conservative Colonial design, this modest tablet has received the same painstaking attention to detail accorded the larger and more costly projects. As noted in the previous caption, the lettering area has been composed to provide for three inscriptions. PC4210 for John Reynolds, of New York City.

HEADSTONE

Located in a wooded dell set aside for the Vanderbilt family in Moravian Cemetery, Staten Island, the memorial to Louise Vanderbilt Schieffelin Hewitt bespeaks the reserve often reflected by prominent families. The small stone at the foot of the grave, bearing the initials of the deceased, more recently regarded as superfluous, nonetheless recalls a quaint custom prevalent in an earlier period. PL23588 for William J. Schieffelin, of New York City.

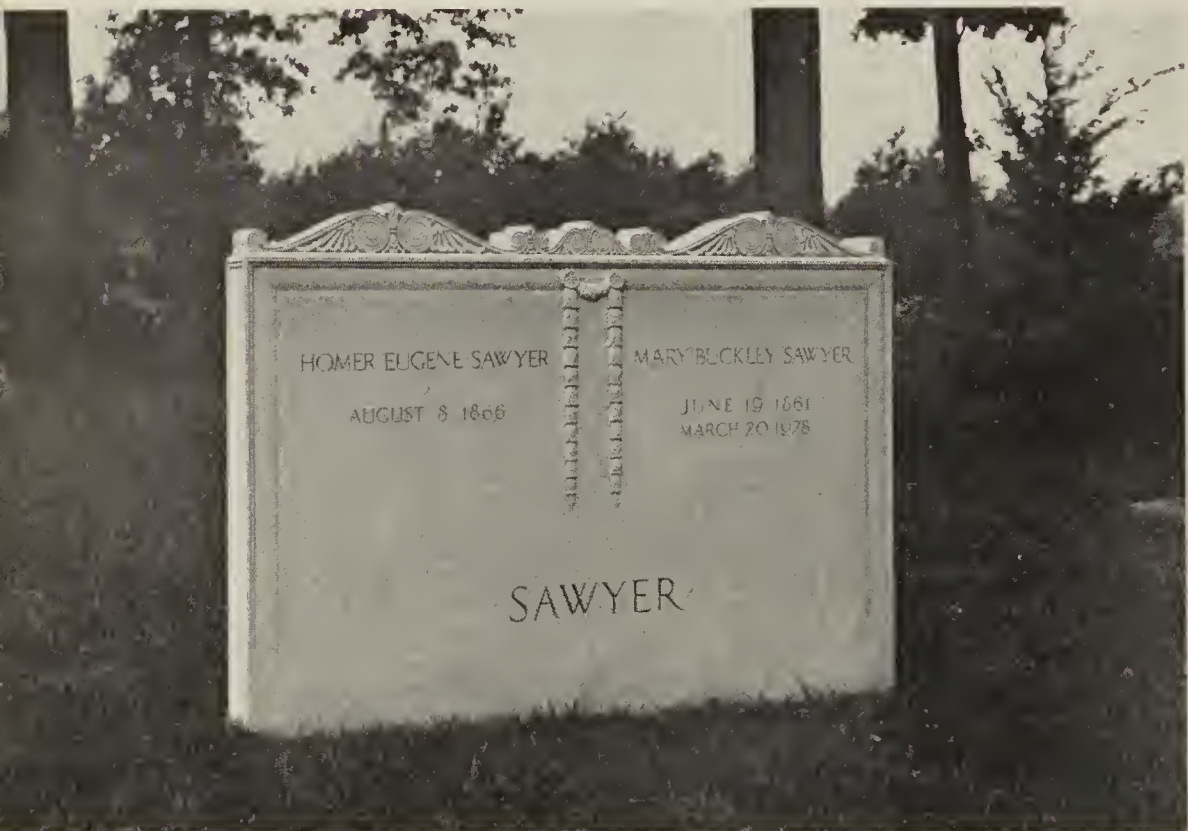

Slate was a favored medium for the headstone of Colonial times. Regarded as somewhat less enduring than granite, slate affords the compensating advantage of making possible great delicacy of detail. Attention is called to the exquisite expression of the emblematic hourglass, the richly foliated rinceau border, and the conventionalized water-leaf frame of the lettering panel. The edges of the tablet are ever so slightly bowed—a refinement more felt than seen. Adopted from an early New England prototype (circa 1720) in Deerfield, Massachusetts. PL30873 for Miss Marguerite A. Keasbey, of Morristown, N. J.

The free-standing Cross of modest proportions is an ideal motif for the headstone, significant and appealing in design. (See Crosses, pages 63-72). The area surrounding the symbolic boss at the crossing, has been given an interesting texture through the use of a simplified adaptation of the diaper pattern, used in varying degrees in all periods of architecture. PL24665 for Mrs. W. A. Purrington, of New York City.

THE HEADSTONE CROSS AND DOUBLE HEADSTONE

When but two interments are planned for a cemetery plot, the double headstone may be used in place of a central or family monument. Manifestly dual in character, such a headstone expresses a nice sentiment when husband and wife are interred side by side alone in a plot. PL24816 designed and erected for Homer E. Sawyer in Holliston, Massachusetts.

The lovely memorial erected to Mrs. Meyer was done in white Vermont marble. Questioned by some, on the strength of lesser lasting qualities, marble is often recommended for decorative works, especially where delicate detail is involved. Reassuring to those considering its adoption is the knowledge of hundreds of colonial headstones in the rigorous climate of New England, standing in a good state of preservation after 200 years or more. Dr. Meyer is to be commended upon his decision to use the direct and obviously sincere epitaph: "Wife, Mother, Friend, whose life was full of love, unselfishness and devotion. PL26230 for Dr. Willy Meyer, of New York City."

THE HEADSTONE—DECORATIVE AND UNEMBELLISHED

Complementing the double headstone opposite, the Robbins memorial again demonstrates that simple lines can express a high degree of refinement. Care in detailing the lettering and an exquisite relationship to the inscription surfaces and carved Latin Crosses contribute to the charm of this nicely conceived memorial. Though it may not so appear, the work is carved from a single block of stone. PL31160 for Mrs. Julian W. Robbins, of New York City.

THE MARKER DESIGNATING INDIVIDUAL INTERMENTS

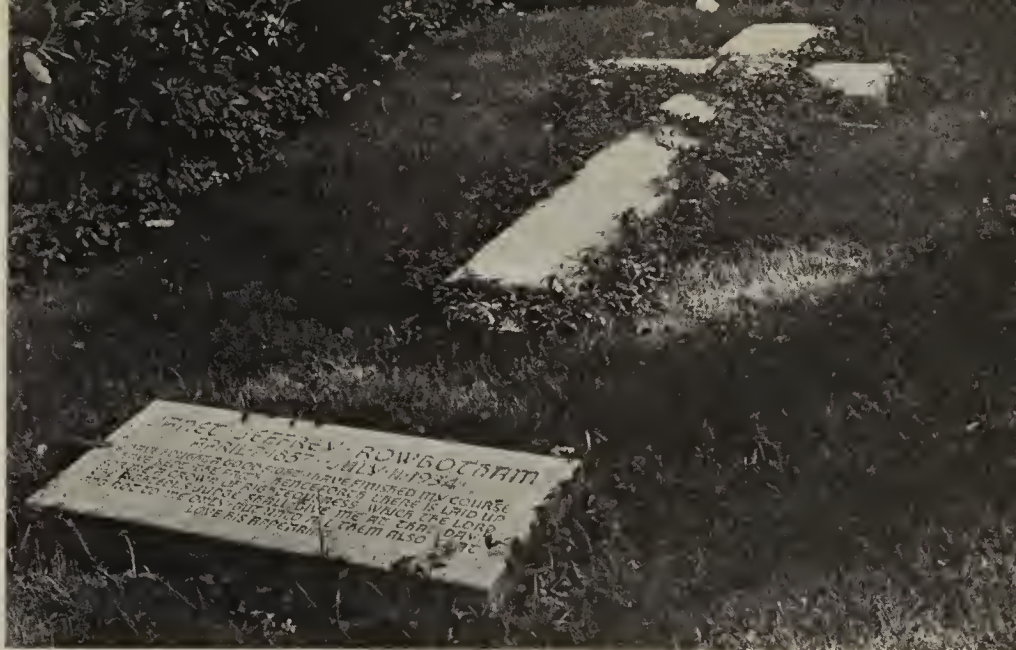

In this unique treatment of a family plot in St. Mary's Churchyard, Tuxedo Park, N.Y., the marker not only serves its primary purpose of marking the graves, but also affords an esthetic accent in the composition of a deep plot featured by a rugged Cross embedded in the natural outcropping of rock at the rear,—most fitting in the surroundings of peace and beauty. PL22185 for Richard Delafield, of New York City. Bowen Bancroft, Architect.

Primarily the marker is considered a means of identifying the grave. Hence, the recommendation that it be as simple and unobtrusive as possible. The full sentiment is best expressed in the central memorial, appropriately designed. It is therefore wisdom to restrain the size and character of the markers so they may be harmonious, but definitely subordinate. PL34401 for Charles N. Lighed, of Washington, D. C.

The marker is conventionally flat or "recumbent," bearing the lettering on the top surface. Here, however, the erect tablet form has been adopted, with the inscription carved upon the vertical face. Occasionally, as in this instance, the character of the central memorial can be recalled in the markers with good effect. PL21920 for C. E. Prior of Bridgeport, Conn.

THE MARKER IN VARIOUS FORMS

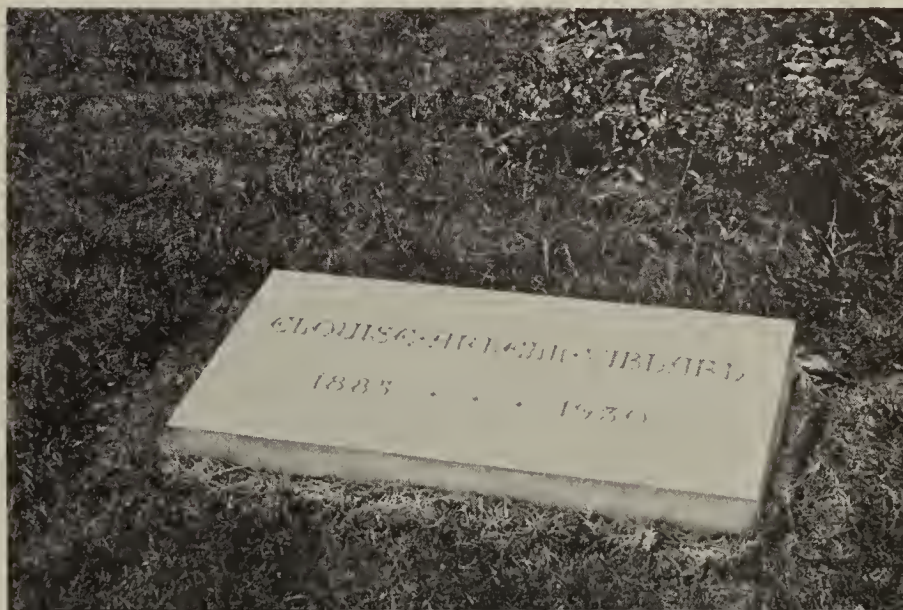

The marker is ordinarily used as a supplement to a central memorial in a family plot. Here, in a quaint churchyard, the marker has been used in lieu of the erect headstone, and enhanced by the charming recumbent Cross, superimposed upon the grave. As an interesting departure, the surfaces have been finely stippled to remove the mechanical precision sometimes considered objectionable. PL31663 designed and erected for G. G. Rowbotham in Great Neck, L. I.

The sides of this marker have been given a slight entasis to simulate the base or socket-stone of the Celtic Cross illustrated on page 64, which it is designed to accompany. The slightly roughened or "antique" finish used for obvious reasons on the Cross has also been applied to the marker. PL 24372 for W. J. K. Vanston, in Orange, N. J.

Where conditions do not invite departures, the marker has come to have an almost standard form. Here is illustrated such a marker. Care and study are still important however, as is suggested in the expert detailing of the lettering of ecclesiastical character to conform with the Gothic spirit of the family memorial. PL29144 for W. Kenneth Van Ness, of Ridgewood, N. J.

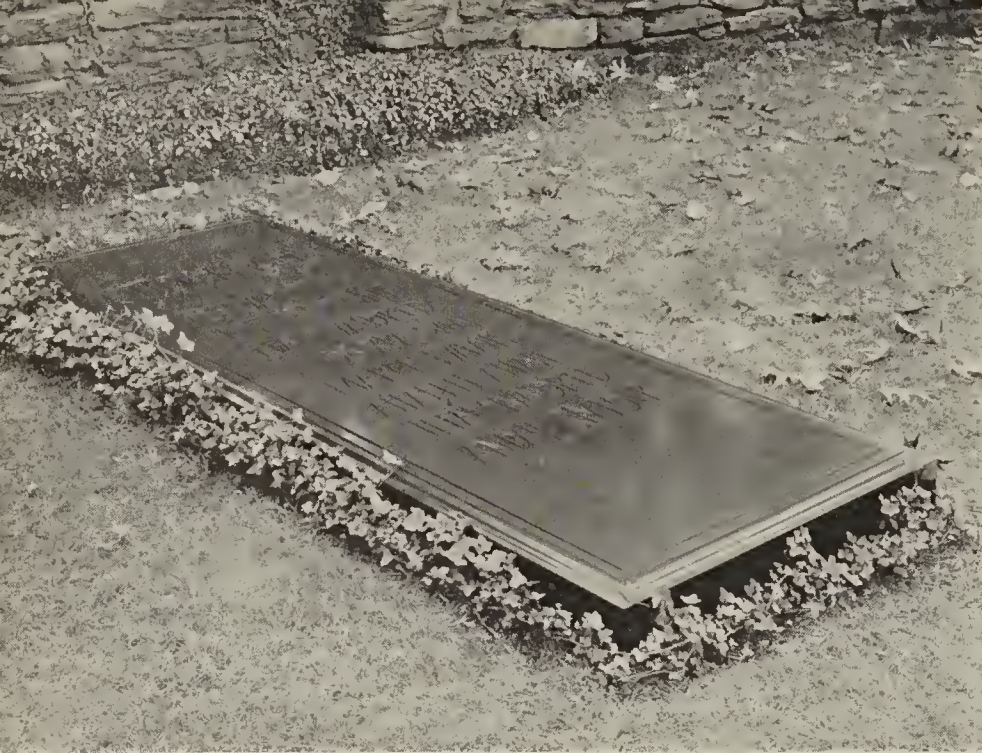

An Ancient prototype is frequently used by Presbrey-Leland as inspiration for a fitting and effective memorial. Here an early Christian erect tablet of Etruscan origin has been adapted as a recumbent slab, or "ledger-stone"—an entirely acceptable practice if expertly treated, as this beautiful memorial eloquently demonstrates. PL28997 for Mrs. Francis H. McCullagh, of Los Gatos, Calif.

THE INDIVIDUAL LEDGER-STONE

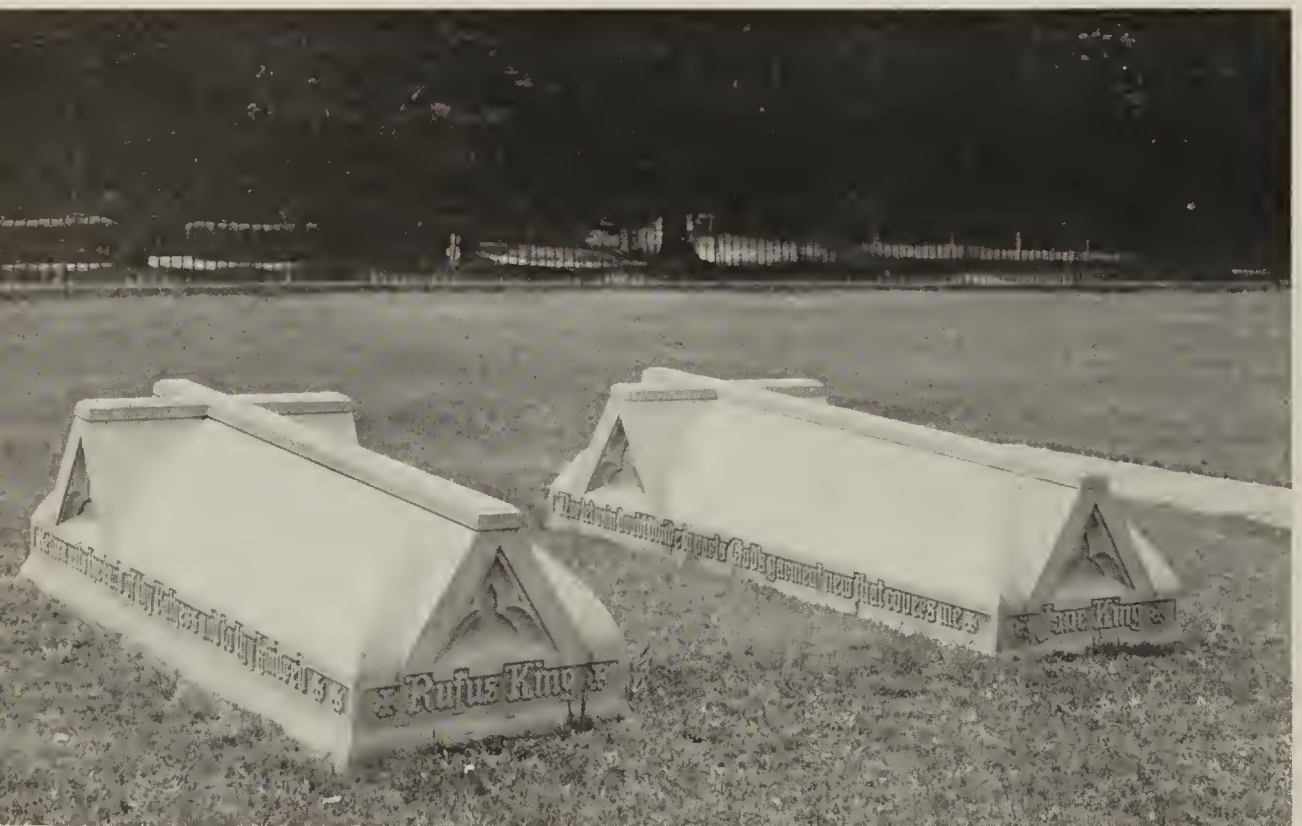

The individual ledger-stone should be distinguished as to function from its counterpart, the ledger-tomb (see page 21). Similar in outward appearance, the ledger tomb can provide for a number of interments, while the single recumbent slab serves as a tribute to the individual. This latter type is appropriate only when the plot is planned for one or two interments, since a greater number begins to cause monotonous repetition. PL27871 for the Reverend R. S. Wood, of Tuxedo Park, N. Y.

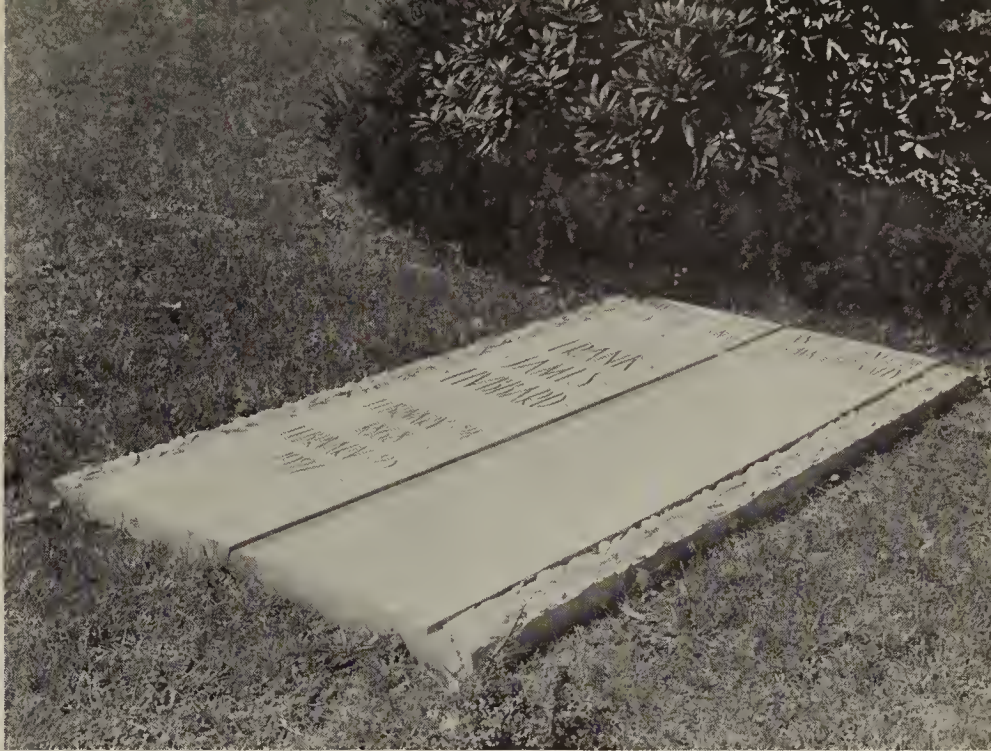

Many regard the Memoria Cemetery at Cold Spring Harbor, Long Island, as possessing the ideal attributes for a final resting place. Shunning pretense and ostentation, custom dictates that the family plot, usually a grass covered clearing virtually hidden in the natural setting that embowers it, be treated in a simple manner. Here the late Otto H. Kahn lies in surroundings of breathless peace and quiet, the beautifully executed slate slab marking the grave. PL31099 for the Estate of Otto H. Kahn.

THE LEDGER-STONE MODERN AND ANCIENT SOURCE

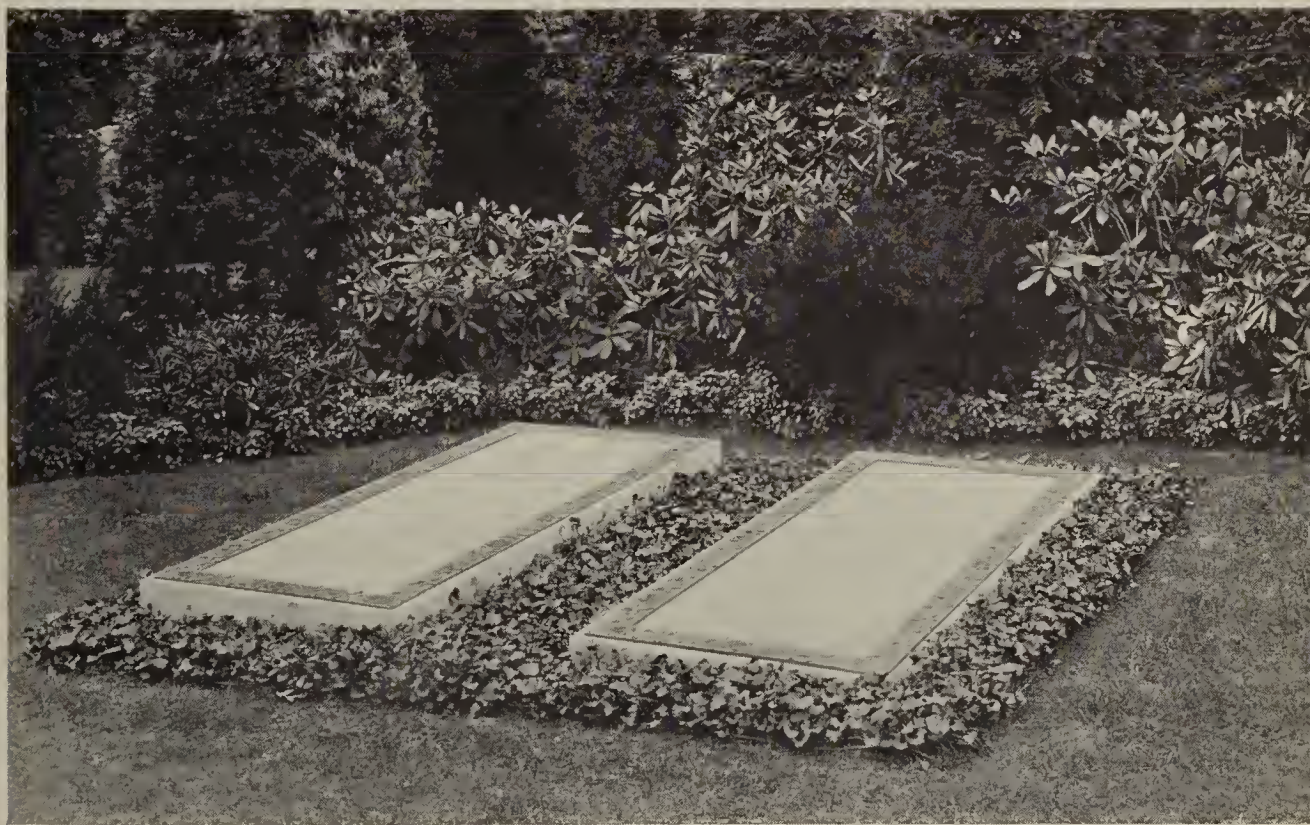

Though the accompanying twin memorials fall into the general classification of ledgers, they are adapted from a form of sepulture known as "Cross tombs" or occasionally "stone coffins",—common from the fourteenth to the mid-seventeenth century. During the latter course of this period, Gothic architecture was in its ascendancy; hence most examples reflected the Gothic influence. The form of the stone, known as en dos d'asne, invited the use of the coped Cross, the arms of which denoted the length and breadth of the repository. Note the exquisite detailing of the lettering affording an added esthetic touch. PL37186 for Rufus King, Esq., Lakeville, Conn.

Caution has been expressed against adopting the ledger-stone in plots where more than two interments are contemplated. Provision for husband and wife may be made most appropriately by using twin slabs as illustrated below, or by a single stone, dually composed, as shown here. An elongated Cross of inverted V-section fittingly segregates the individual lettering areas, and also accents the epitaph at the top PL33580 designed and erected in Plainfield, N. J. for Mr. Frank J. Hubbard.

DOUBLE LEDGER
TWIN LEDGER-STONES

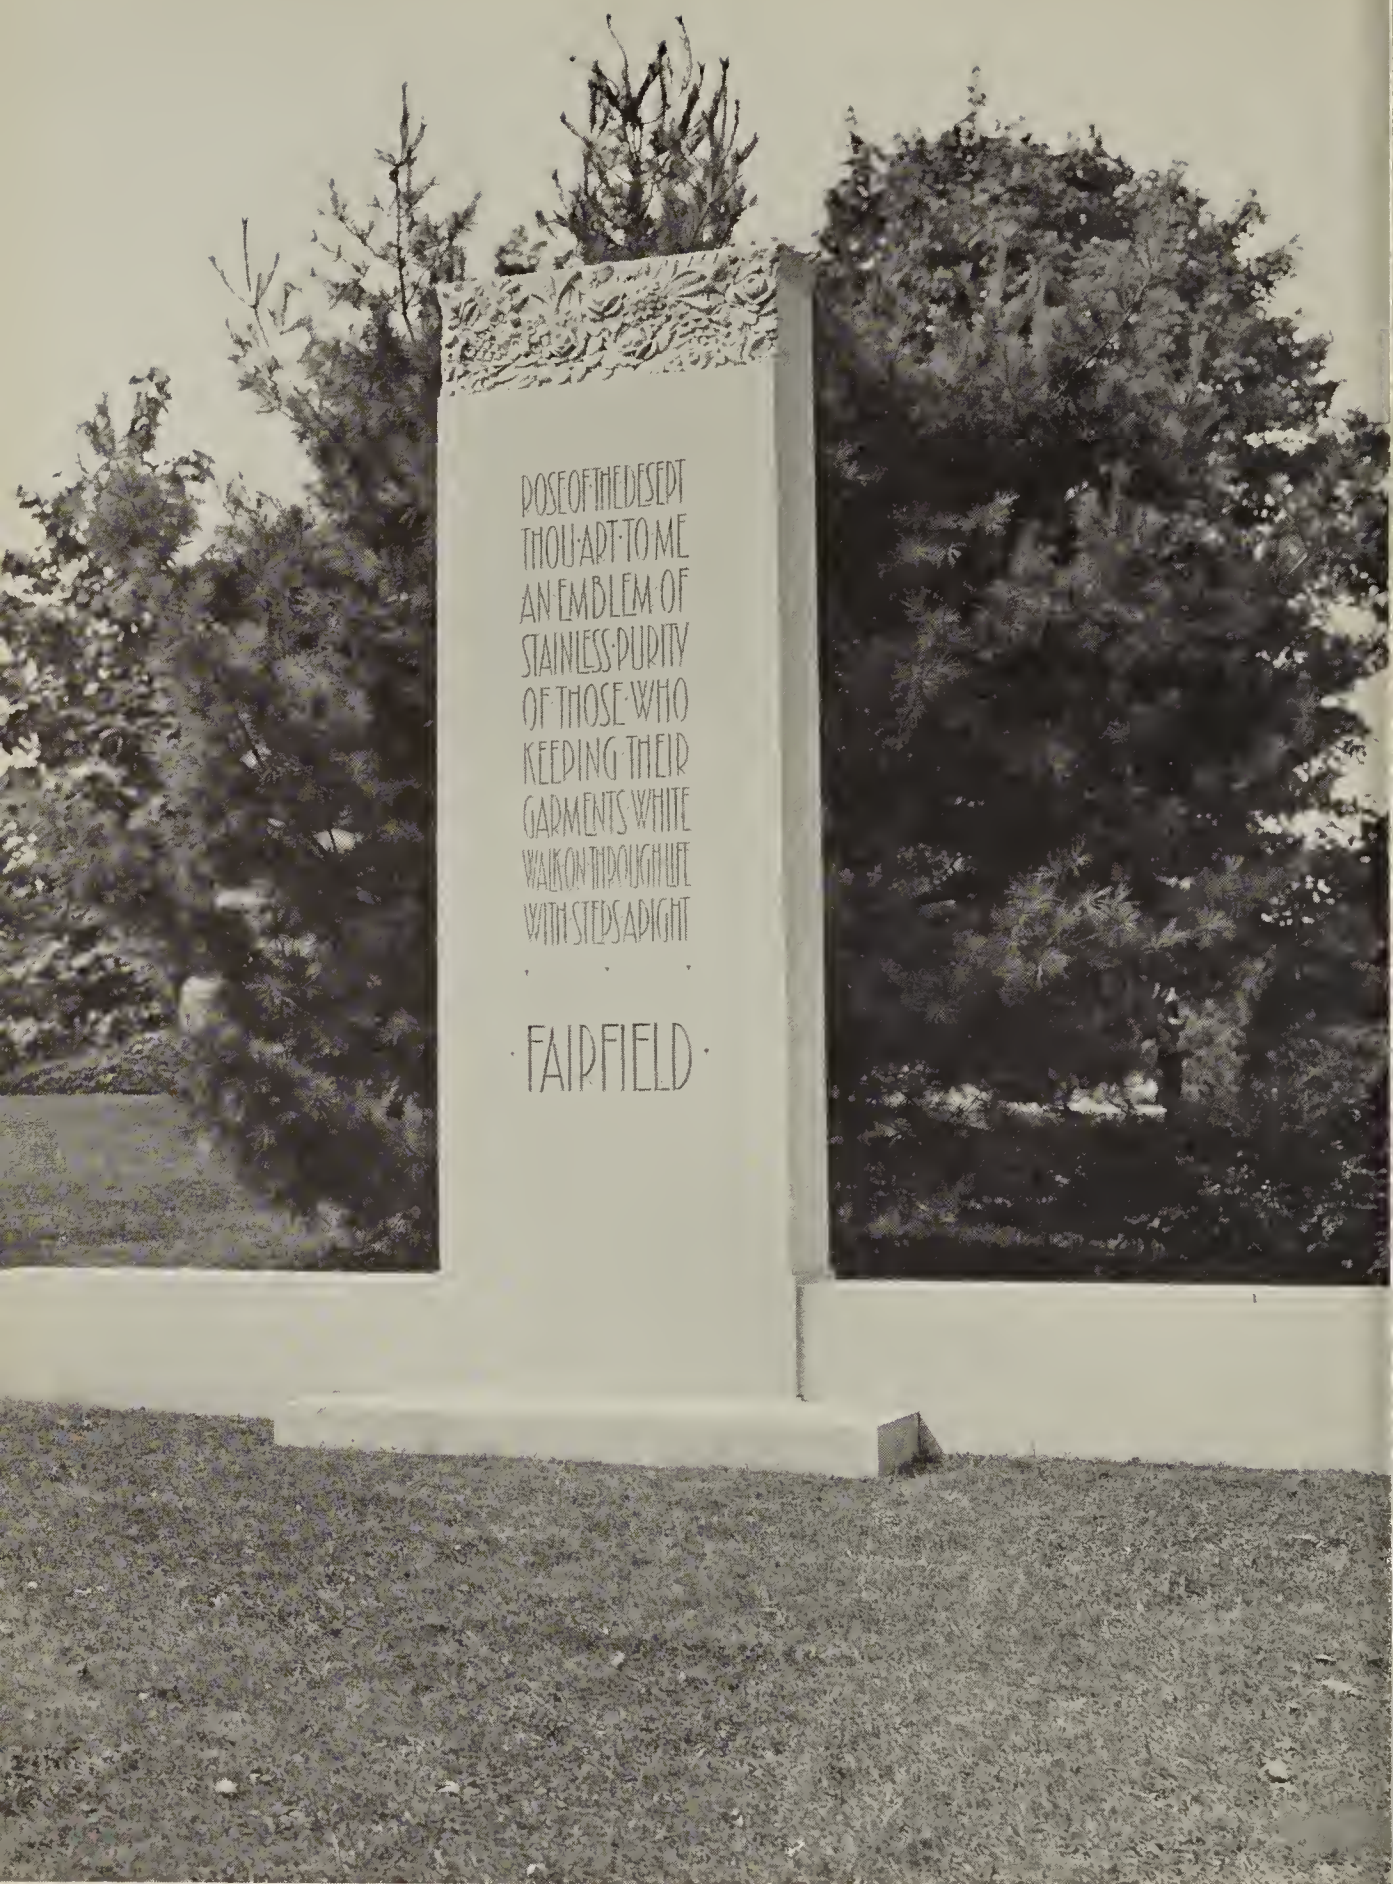

Family plots of sufficient area lend themselves to the use of twin ledger-stones—by nature fitting for man and wife. Presbrey-Leland primarily concerned with designing and working in stone, is nevertheless constantly aware of the vital importance of correlating its work with the particular plot and its setting. The accompanying illustration is cited as an admirable example. Here the ornamental border is done in cast bronze. PL30389 for Philip G. McFadden, of New York City.

FAIRFIELD

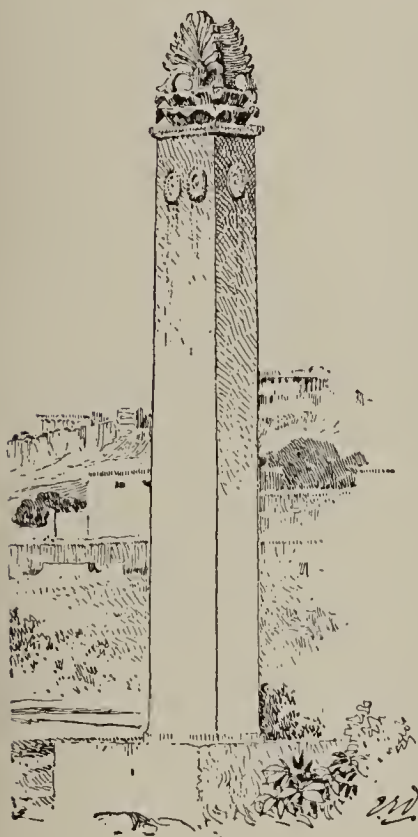

Since the days of the ancient Greek stele, monuments of slab-like form, either vertical or horizontal in mass, have been a favored type of cemetery memorial. This form has been brought to a high degree of architectural beauty by Presbrey-Leland designers. In this stately example of the monumental tablet a superb correlation of severe masses is found eminently satisfying, the richly carved crown and the beautifully composed lettering constituting the only ornamental relief. PL33667 for George E. Fairfield, Esq., Bloomfield, Conn.

THE TABLET

FOR want of a better term, all monuments of a slender, slab-like form are designated as Tablets, albeit the Greek stele and one or two particular types in this group have more specific names. The Tablet is the most prevalent of all memorials in our cemeteries today. It has replaced the sarcophagus and other more massive compositions—evidence of a desirable tendency to avoid mere bulk of stone.

In design the Tablet may be adapted to the smallest plot and the most conservative appropriation, or it may be given the imposing scale and architectural beauty adapted to a plot of large area. Ancient Greek Steles, Romano-British headstones and Celtic Cross Tablets influence the design of many memorials of this type today. It will be observed that the Tablets here illustrated are divided in two groups—the vertical and the horizontal.

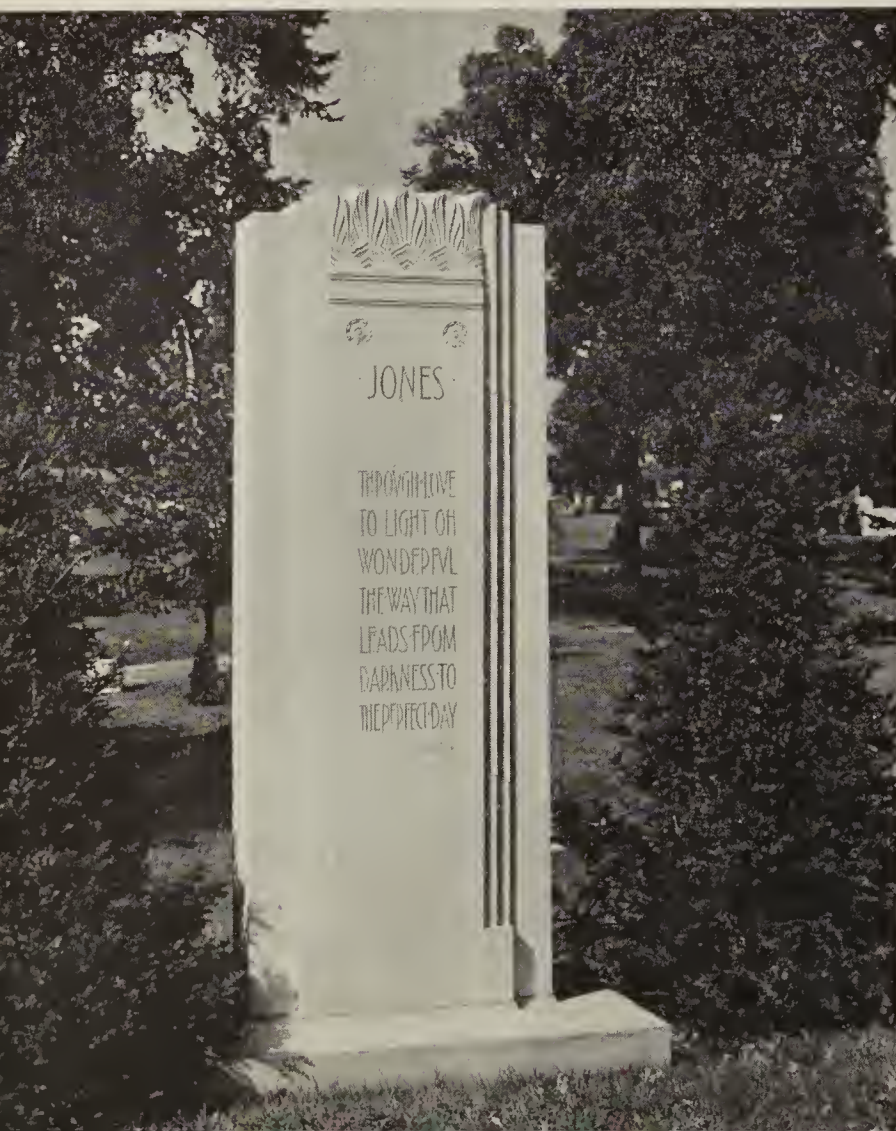

Grecian grave monument or stele, in the cemetery on the Eridanus, erected in memory of Hegeso, daughter of Proxenus. The modern cemetery tablet had its origin in steles of this form.

One of the numerous steles in the Ceramicus, Athens. The stele was the favoured type of memorial in ancient Greece, notably as a cenotaph.

Triangular in form, representing the Trinity, this Modern variant of the ancient stele is enriched with a stylized bas-relief of the Blessed Virgin. Modelled by Miss Evelyn Lewis, this beautiful architectural sculpture composes perfectly with the form of the memorial—an object lesson in effective collaboration of artists and architects in the Presbrey-Leland studio. PL26885 for John F. Miller, Esq., of County of Allegheny, Pa.

VARIANTS OF THE STELE

The adaptability of the Modern architecture to memorial design is convincingly illustrated in the conservative individuality and refinement of this erect tablet. Using the ancient Greek stele as a central motif, Presbrey-Leland designers have introduced the Modern or Contemporary detail in the play of vertical bands and the ornament. Here again the memorial is enriched with an inspiring epitaphical quotation. PL 32357 for T. C. Jones, Esq. Delaware, Ohio.

In the literature of art we are often told that the ancient stele or grave monument typifies the superb refinement of Greek design. Hence it is that architects and sculptors so often adopt the stele in memorials to notables in art, science and the military. For sheer elegance it is unrivalled in the monuments of antiquity. This outstanding example was carved in white marble from models prepared in the studios of Presbrey-Leland. PL26721 for Frank S. Livingood, Esq., of Reading, Penna.

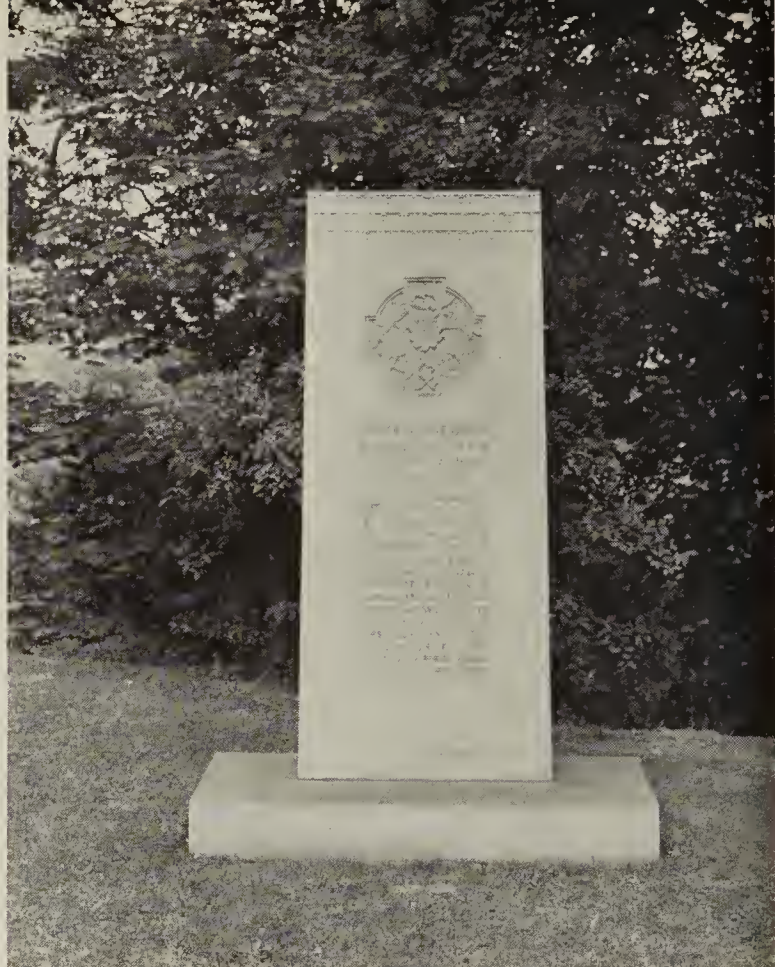

GREEK STELE AND ADAPTATION

The stele, as well as other forms having their origin in a traditional order or historic prototype, may be simplified to the point of reflecting the mere basic conception. Mr. Betelle, of the noted architectural firm of Guilbert and Betelle, authorized Presbrey-Leland to create the family memorial here illustrated. Note the success with which the bare suggestion of the traditional crown of the stele has been achieved. The severity of the shaft focuses attention on the exquisitely carved family crest, appropriately juxtaposed with the name. PL45481 for James Betelle of Short Hills, N. J.

The decided preference for tablets of horizontal mass can often be disregarded to excellent advantage by an intelligent adaptation of another form to the site, the surroundings, and the composition invited by individual requirements. Note the measure of distinction imparted to this memorial of severe outline, by the Biblical quotation decoratively applied as a crest, the hand-carved cruciform panel, and the inscription lettering, tabulated with superb finesse. PL32311 designed and erected for Mrs. Edgar Moore Green, of Easton, Pa.

VERTICAL TABLETS— CONSERV- ATIVE DESIGN

It is repeatedly demonstrated by the resourceful designers of Presbrey-Leland that a large appropriation is not necessary in achieving distinction. Here was expressed a proper desire to erect a memorial of a scale adequate to embrace a family plot of greater than average area. It was done through the expedient of extending low wings laterally from a tall central tablet of extremely simple design. The effect is most successful, while the cost is surprisingly low. Obviously a setting of such fitting character is a decided asset to a memorial of this form. PL35651 for Felix Kramer, of New York City.

44

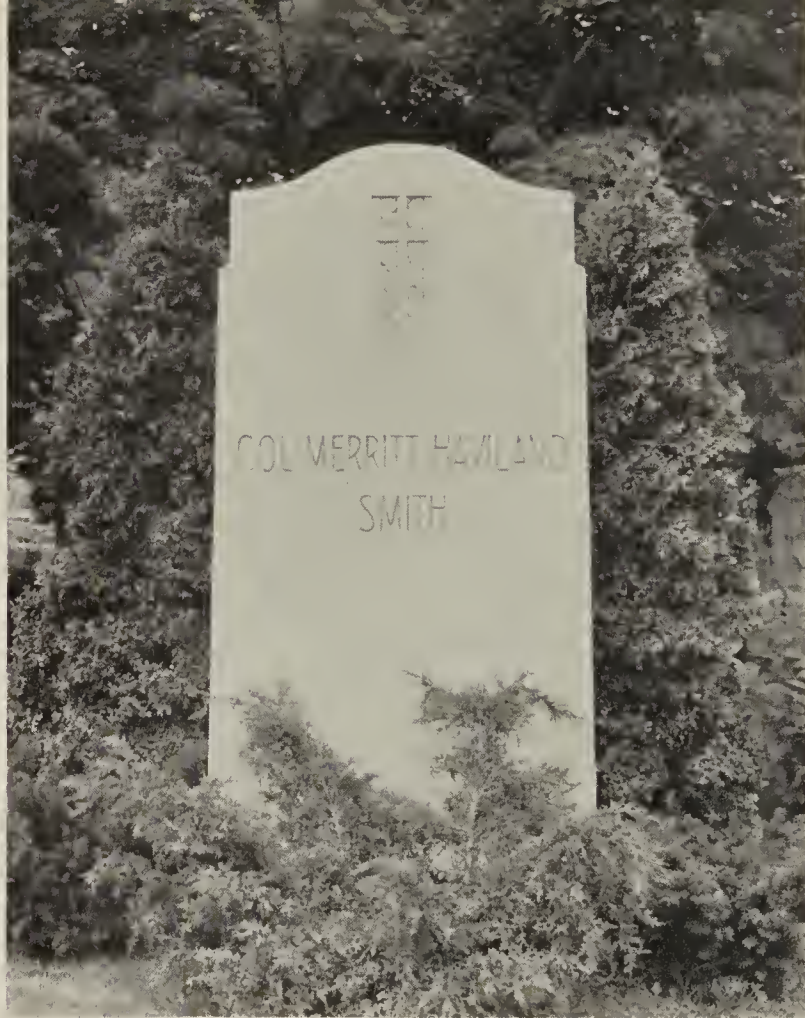

Vertical lines, in the abstract significance of form, express inspiration—horizontal lines, repose. The verticality of this contemporary tablet is accentuated by a subtle entasis and the play of vertical bands on the sides—a treatment typical of the modern style. Sculptured roses symbolizing Love enrich the panel. PL28444 designed and erected for Frederick H. Ecker, Esq., of New York City.

VERTICAL TABLETS— CONTEMPORARY SCHOOL

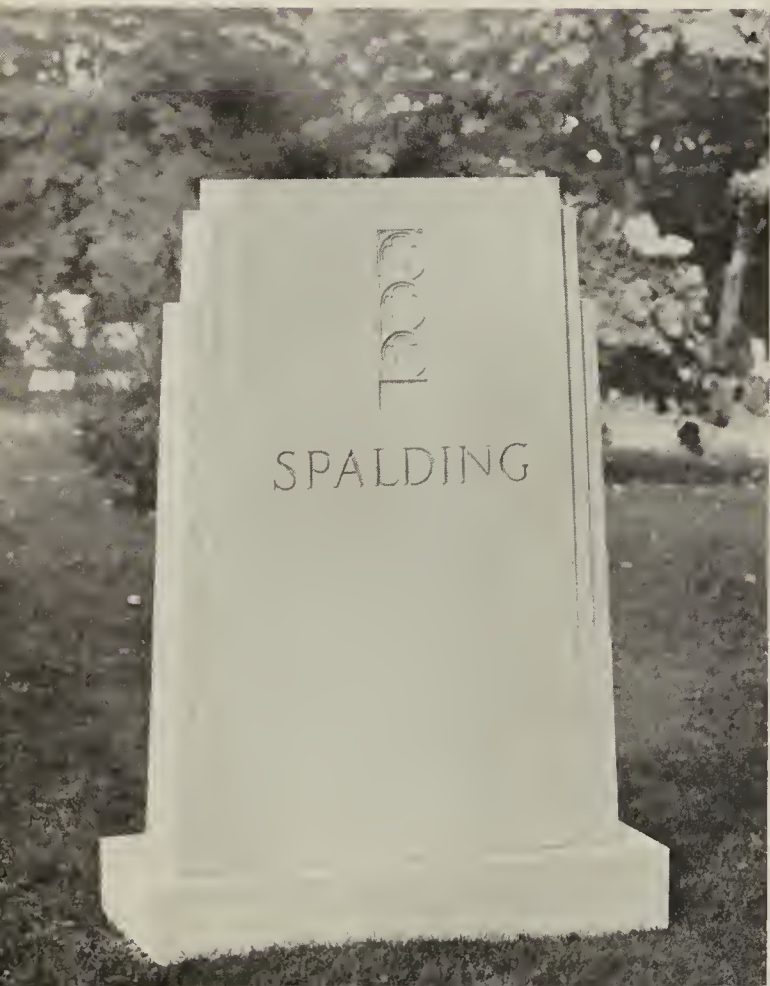

As has been suggested elsewhere, there may be danger in applying the forms of the Contemporary School of Design to the memorial field. While all orders of architecture are temporal, and their popular appeal waxes and wanes, much of the Modern Architecture has been grossly over-done and must be regarded as "faddish." However, if left to the competent designer, the result can be a true and appropriate expression of the present-day spirit. The stately example of the monumental tablet here illustrated reflects the necessary designing talent. PL 31547 for the Estate of Harry C. Trexler, Allentown, Pa.

In many instances a cemetery plot may be of restricted width, the arrangement of the grave areas being such that its depth is relatively great. The monolithic vertical tablet is often the appropriate solution. Here the refined effect of such a tablet is exemplified to good advantage. Not discernable in the illustration, a stippled surface has been executed as a departure from the conventional finish, and to afford a slight contrast with the carefully tooled carving. PL36953 for Mrs. Merritt Haviland Smith, of Bronxville, N. Y.

VERTICAL TABLETS— MODERATE SCALE

The vertical tablet of small or moderate scale may be confused with the headstones illustrated on pages 26-31. True, they are comparable in effect, but the tablet is appropriate for a plot of three or more graves and usually bears only the family name, while the headstone is erected as a tribute to an individual, and is inscribed with the personal record. In this example a nice reserve has been expressed through the careful placement of the reglets at the side, pointing up the verticality of form. PL33982 designed and erected for Miss Helen M. Spalding, in Hartford, Conn.

The late Mayor LaGuardia was laid to rest in a modest and peaceful plot in Woodlawn Cemetery, on September 20, 1947. A man whose life was so incredibly full, naturally would have his critics as well as his admirers. But, that the simple epitaph, "LaGuardia, Statesman, Humanitarian", specifically epitomizes his character, few will deny. Eggers and Higgins, architects, have created a vertical tablet of quiet and unostentatious refinement, most conservative, yet unique. The use of symbols to suggest names is a practice fraught with some danger. Here the delicately executed representation of the "Little Flower" seems entirely in order. PL44994 furnished for Eggers & Higgins, for the Estate of Fiorello H. LaGuardia.

VERTICAL TABLETS— INDIVIDUALLY INSCRIBED

The unique memorial to Irwin Hood ("Ike") Hoover is classified as a vertical tablet, despite the absence of the prominent family name and the use of a personal inscription. Designed in a scale correct for a small family plot, the eminence achieved by this humble citizen invited the decision to use the individual epitaph, and to regard the plot as that of Irwin H. Hoover, and not just a branch of the Hoover family. Attention is called to the stylized garland of ivy enclosing a bit of the White House cornice, where "Ike" Hoover served as Chief Usher for forty-two years. PL30863 designed and erected for James Hoover, Washington, D. C.

One criterion of an expert designer is the ability to grasp the importance of relating composition to scale. So often an obvious error is committed in trying to reduce a large memorial to dimensions appropriate for a smaller plot. Note how successfully the modern spirit of the larger Ecker memorial, page 45, has been expressed in this small tablet, through simplification and superb attention to detail and the relationship of the ornamental elements. PL30317 for William E. Hetzell, of Philadelphia, Pa.

VERTICAL TABLETS— MODERN AND CLASSIC

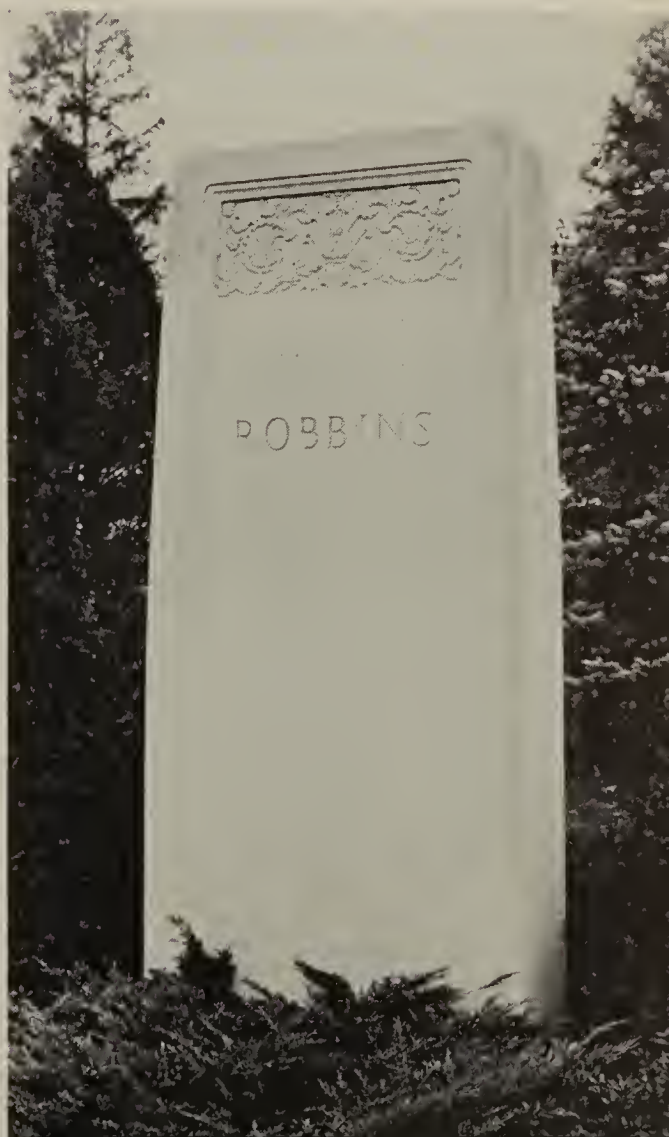

Erect tablets of this type are impressive architecturally. Their source may be traced to the stele and other shrine-like monuments of ancient Greece. The detail in this is thoroughly studied—a feature of Presbrey-Leland memorials. PL20451 for Henry C. Ballou, Esq., Utica, New York.

Monolithic construction is often desirable in memorial design. It has no marked structural advantage, for, whatever the form, a substantial concrete foundation provides the same permanent stability. However, the absence of joints eliminates any possible need for "pointing" (the process of cementing the outer edge of the joint for neatness of appearance only) in future years. Often too, the effect of one-piece design is a welcome departure. The beautifully carved Pelican and her young is a traditional symbol connoting the Lord's Atonement. PL30647 for Mr. John Salzer of Hartford, Conn.

VERTICAL TABLETS— MONOLITHIC

Another fine example of the monolithic vertical tablet, this stately memorial again establishes the vital importance of studied composition. It also demonstrates that detail from one source can be applied to a form from another, with perfect harmony. The crisp moulds at the margin of the recessed panel, and the exquisitely carved acanthus motif are typically classic. Yet the form of the slab is definitely derived from the ancient "menhir" prevalent in Brittany some ten centuries ago. PL30753 for Mrs. Charlotte S. Robbins, of Hartford, Conn.

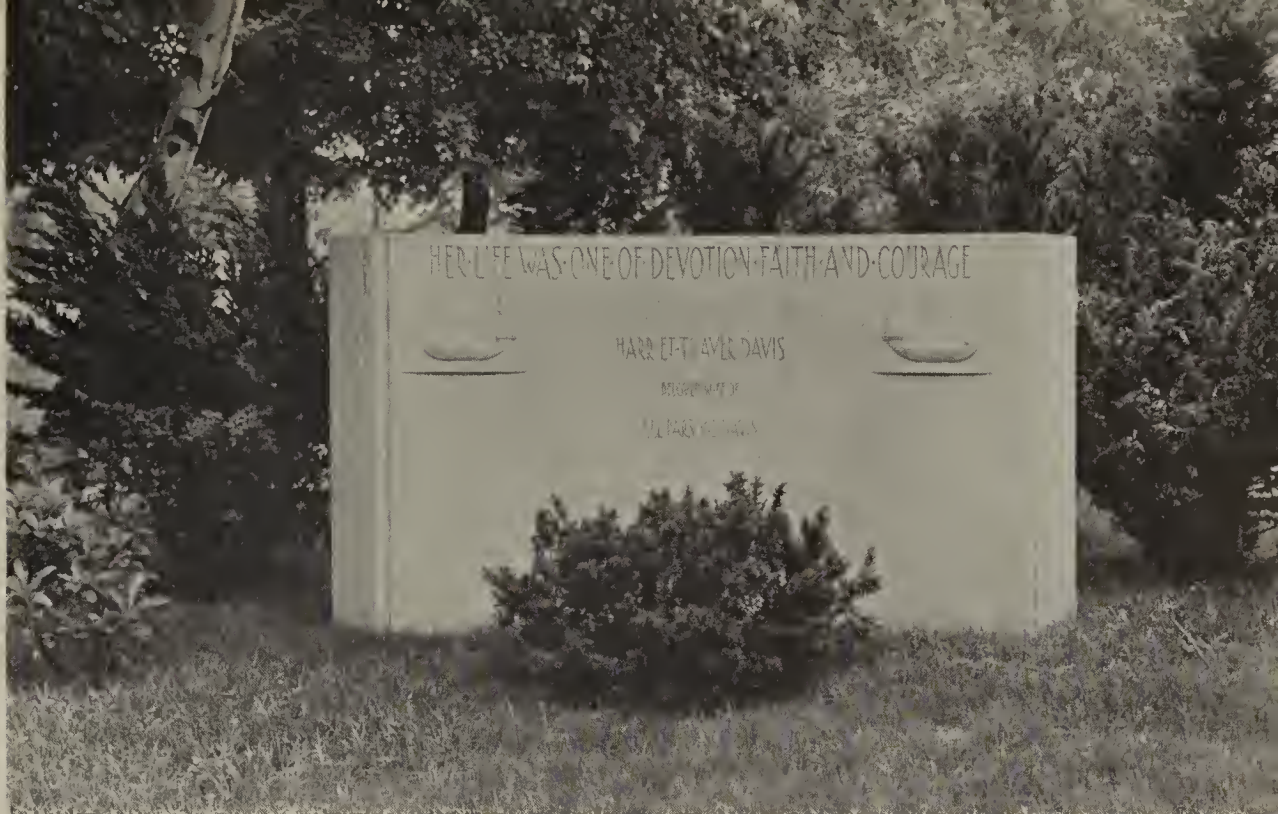

The monolithic tablet, by eliminating the conventional projecting base, is often recommended for a plot of limited area. Furthermore, there are instances where the space at the head of the plot is restricted, an added consideration in a proper adaptation of the form of memorial to the space requirements. The Brewer family memorial is simple, dignified and unique. Again "modernism" has been used ably and conservatively. PL34955 for Mrs. Anna Brewer, Larchmont, N. Y.

HORIZONTAL TABLETS—MONOLITHIC

The horizontal tablet, as a memorial form, has no direct historic prototype. Its nearest approach is the ancient sarcophagus, adaptations of which appear on pages 78-85 (Sepulchral Sarcophagi, pages 16-17). Considered inappropriate for many of the small or moderate-sized family plots, the massive proportions of the sarcophagus gave way to the more slender slab-like tablet. Here, the monolithic version of the horizontal tablet has been conceived in the modern spirit befitting a type that has existed for less than a half century. PL29920 for the Estate of Charles L. Richards, of Tampa, Florida.

50

As has been intimated elsewhere, a memorial taking the physical form of one type, may be adopted to serve the purpose of another. Here a pleasing monolith of a scale appropriate for a family plot has been erected as a personal tribute. Pronounced restraint is reflected in the happy composition of this horizontal tablet, relating the Lamps of Memory attractively with the inscription, and the votary characterization of the deceased. The plan takes the form of a subtly curved arc. PL37061 designed and erected for Judge L. P. Davis, New Rochelle, N. Y.

HORIZONTAL MONOLITHS—PERSONALIZED

In collaboration with Ely Jacques Kahn, Presbrey-Leland was called upon to produce a memorial to the late Dr. Joshua Loth Liebman, Rabbi of Temple Israel, Boston, and author of the noted work on religious philosophy, "Peace of Mind." The true character of this revered leader of men and humble servant of God is reflected in the modest monolith bearing only the appropriate inscriptions, and the scroll and books, symbolizing the very soul of his life's work. PL46188 for Mrs. Joshua Loth Liebman.

51

Eclecticism is defined as the free use of principles, forms, and details from all the historic styles. There are many who frown upon this practice, particularly where it involves a Roman classic letter with a memorial of Gothic Source or another obvious anachronism. Here, however, the application of a marked colonial flavor, in the silhouette and detail, to a central memorial of horizontal mass cannot but be praised as a successful and gratifying experiment. Attention is called to the superb definition of the carved ornament. PL42237 designed and erected for Van Devanter Crisp, Glen Head, L. I., N. Y.

HORIZONTAL MONOLITHS— COLONIAL AND CONTEMPORARY DETAIL

In an exquisite setting planned by A. F. Brinckerhoff, Landscape Architect, the stately monolith here illustrated reflects the utmost in simple dignity. Severe in form, the ample monolith is subtly designed, and bears the refined bronze plaque, decorated with the chaste palm sprays in delicate relief. Note the absence of any family identification, with only the soulful adoration of Paul the Apostle, expressing a touching and humble sentiment. PL22292 for Frank R. Chambers, Bronxville, N. Y.

52

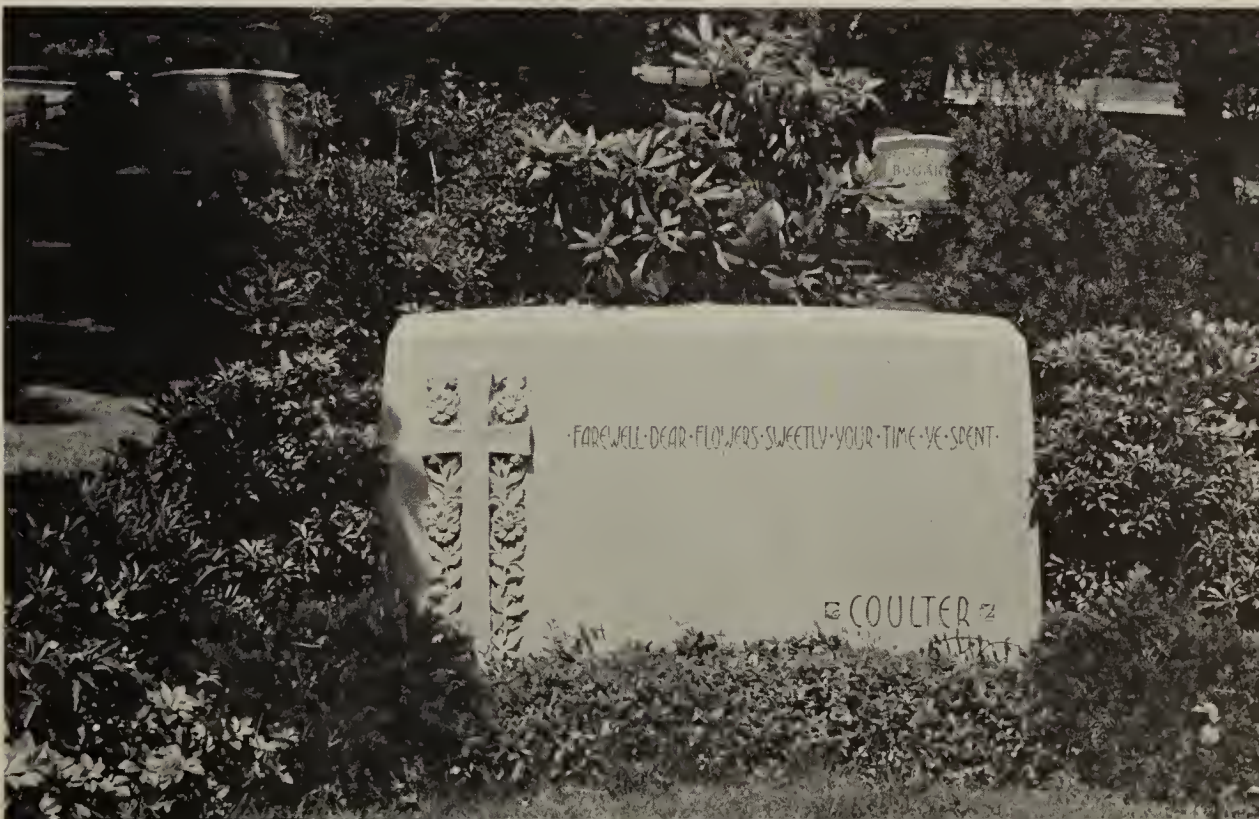

Gothic detail may be applied to a memorial of any type. Here a modest monolith reflects the determination to avoid the commonplace, through the use of the carefully studied panels recessed into the face of the tablet. The suggestion of the reredos in the chancel of a church is appropriately inferred. Despite occasional convictions to the contrary, it is usually considered correct to use a letter of ecclesiastic character for Gothic or Gothicized memorials. PL43673 for the Estate of Gardner Pattison Short Hills, N. J.

HORIZONTAL MONOLITHS—
GOTHICIZED
AND ASYMMETRIC

It goes without saying that symmetry ordinarily appeals to the eye, and usually, therefore, is a requisite of good design. Occasionally, however, a great charm is achieved without the conventional balanced composition. The monolith shown here demonstrates such possibilities. Though technically asymmetric, there is a definite order in the composition, the name letters affording an accent with the Cross-arm on the diagonal, while the quotation continues in the same horizontal plane. PL36451 for the Estate of C. P. Coulter, Manhasset, L. I., N. Y.

53

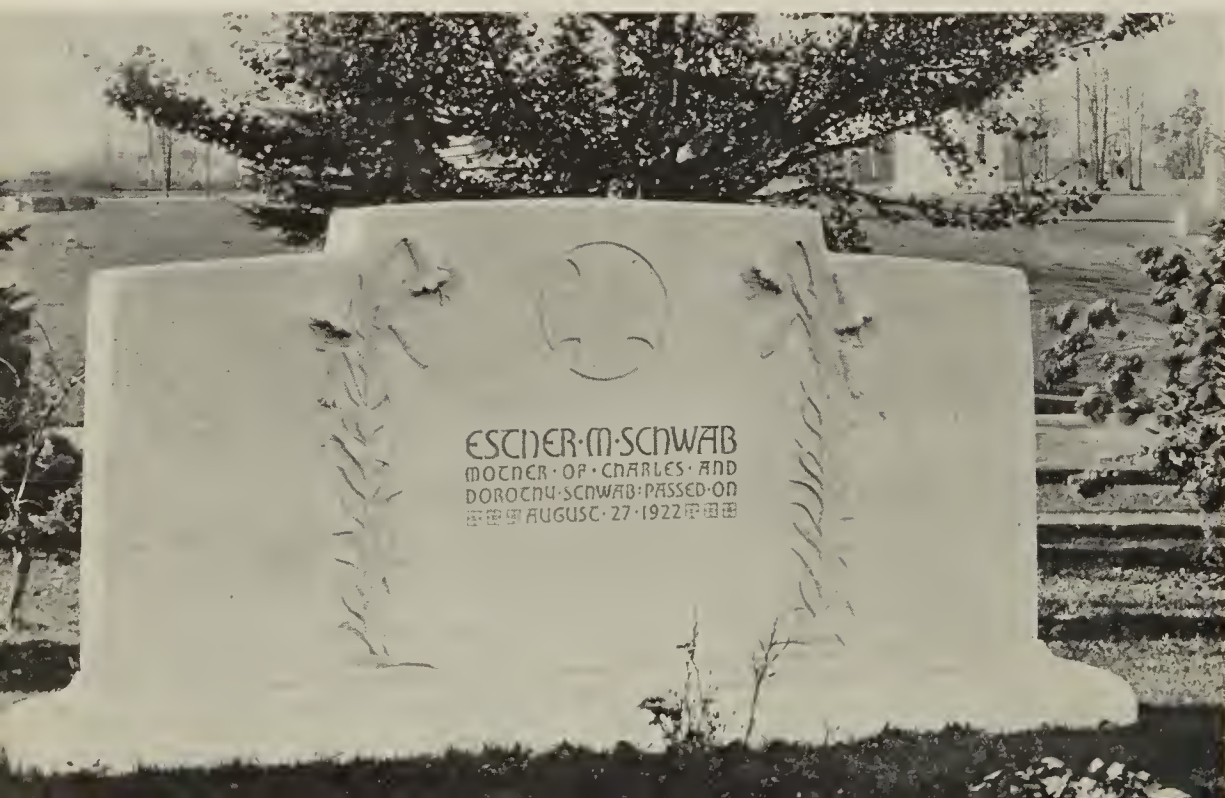

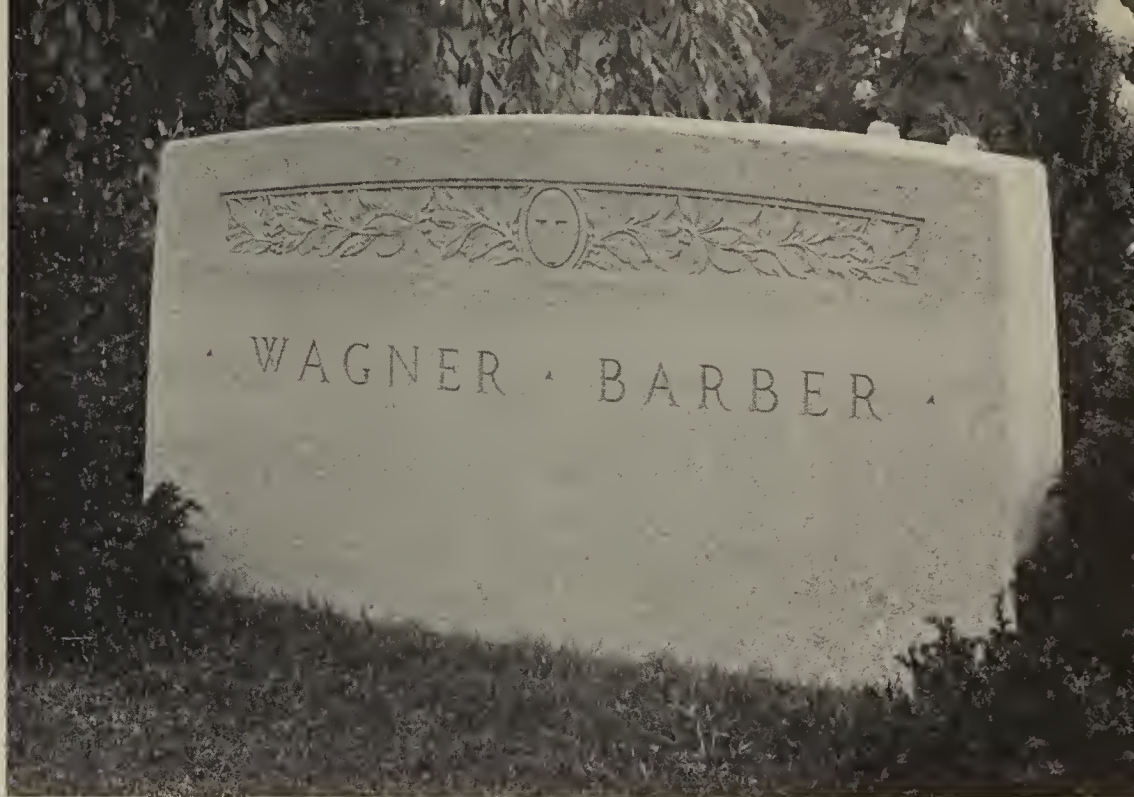

Many of the costlier memorials of today are monolithic in form. This unusual monument of the horizontal tablet or screen type, framed by a superb setting, is a monolith enriched with exquisite carving, typical of Presbrey-Leland design and craftsmanship: Ivy for Memory, on the bands at each end, and Roses for Love in the lunette which, in outline, gives a distinctive contour to the memorial. PL29173 for Mrs. R. M. Williamson, Dallas, Texas.

HORIZONTAL TABLETS—LARGER SCALE

The Annunciation Lily, which frames the Cross and inscription on this memorial, is among the most significant and graceful of all floral motives in art. With exquisite refinement of line, the designer has here recalled the graceful curve of the lily stem in detailing the curving contour of this tablet—an excellent example of resourcefulness in design. Models in clay for the sculptured and architectural decoration of Presbrey-Leland memorials are made in the Studios by sculptors collaborating with the designers. PL20369 for Livingston Middleditch, Jr., in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

Granted that the monolith, as a type, is slightly more economical than a two-piece monument of comparable size, there are many instances where other considerations strongly invite its use. The handsome memorial shown here was not conceived with economy as the primary concern. The subtly curved lines of the silhouette, and the richly hand-carved panel of laurel bear witness. A fine-stippled finish affords an added touch of distinction. Note the ideal setting, which with the monolith is more important than with the conventional monument. PL31462 designed and erected for Mrs. Catherine D. Barber, Danielson, Conn.

HORIZONTAL MONOLITHS—STIPPLED FINISH

In the field of good design, it is almost axiomatic that memorials making a prominent feature of the Cross should be vertical in mass. Obviously, the upright rectangle lends itself to the Cross-form naturally and appropriately. (See Cross-tablets, pp 76-77). Occasionally, however, conditions at the site, or a predilection for the horizontal mass, presents the problem of composing the Cross properly with the low lines of the horizontal tablet. Here the successful solution is most evident. Note the ingenious skill with which the outline of the top has been merged into the form of the Cross, avoiding the almost inevitable effect of "cutting the tablet in two" with the vertical line of the Cross. PL22164 for Miss Evangeline Williams, New York, N. Y.

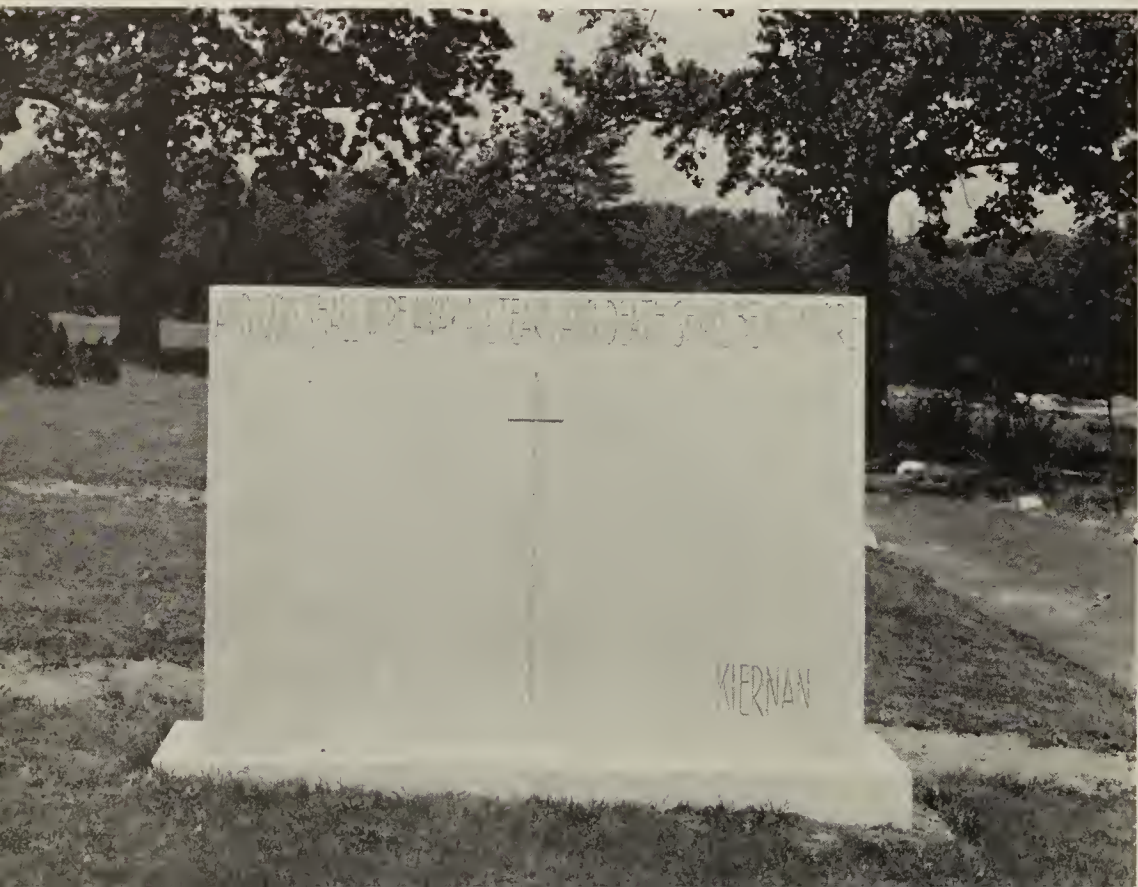

HORIZONTAL
WITH BASE

In many sections of the country, the horizontal tablet is today the most favored form of memorial for the family burial site of average size. Granted that too frequent repetition of any type can become monotonous, it nevertheless cannot be contested that the long, low lines of the horizontal monument are satisfying and restful. Here Presbrey-Leland has relieved the problem of monotony through the use of a variegated granite with highly polished surfaces. The tooled finish of the panel enclosing the conventionalized True Vine and the name affords a nice contrasting color. PL32109 for Walter A. McLaren, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

It is to be noted that simplicity need not be expressed at the expense of distinction. Contrast this nicely conceived example of the two-piece horizontal tablet with most conventional memorials—ofttimes products of the “ruler-and-chisel” artisan. The front surface is subtly concave, while the appropriate Biblical quotation has been designed to form a part of the architectural composition. The family name at the lower right, like the signature on a letter, suggests an humble informality, most welcome as a change from the traditional location. PL33326 for Frank Kiernan of Montclair, N. J.

HORIZONTAL TABLETS— CONTEMPORARY AND GOTHIC DETAIL

While there has been a decided trend toward the use of severe lines in the horizontal tablet, many still find the slightly more conservative serpentine top appealing. Needless to say, the careful detailing of this silhouette is vital to good design. Here the picture is one of studied refinement—the carved panels affording charming relief in a severe background. The surfaces are stippled—a desirable departure from the conventional treatment. PL34924 for Mrs. C. H. Rickert, of Flushing, L. I.

It cannot be maintained that Presbrey-Leland will refuse to comply with the reasonable request of a patron. Its designers are eager to advise—not to command. Here, as suggested elsewhere, the combination of a classic letter with a moulding of Gothic spirit, does not receive the whole-hearted approval of the Studios. Be it offered in justification, however, that there is some ground for criticism of the relative illegibility of the Gothic letter. Hence this small concession in composing a design of excellent proportion, warranting especial praise for its subtle grace and refinement. PL26311 for Estate of A. H. Brown, Greenwich, Conn.

The nearer the approach to absolute severity of design, the more important the detail of ornamental relief. Here the very essence of simplicity is exemplified—even to the absence of the conventional "wash" at the top of the base. But the perfect execution of the names and the nicety of their composition with the simple dividing line, lend an effect wholly satisfying to those who are not partial to decoration. PL35611 for Samuel P. Lesser, of Newark, N. J.

HORIZONTAL TABLETS— UNEMBELLISHED

Family plots of ample width often invite a memorial of adequate scale. This happily provides opportunity for achieving the long, low grace of the pronounced rectangular mass, without consuming too great a proportion of the plot. The cross-grade, always a somewhat disturbing factor, has been counteracted by the offset on the face of the base, attracting the eye to the pleasing parallel lines. PL46115 for the Estate of Isidore P. Heller, New York City.

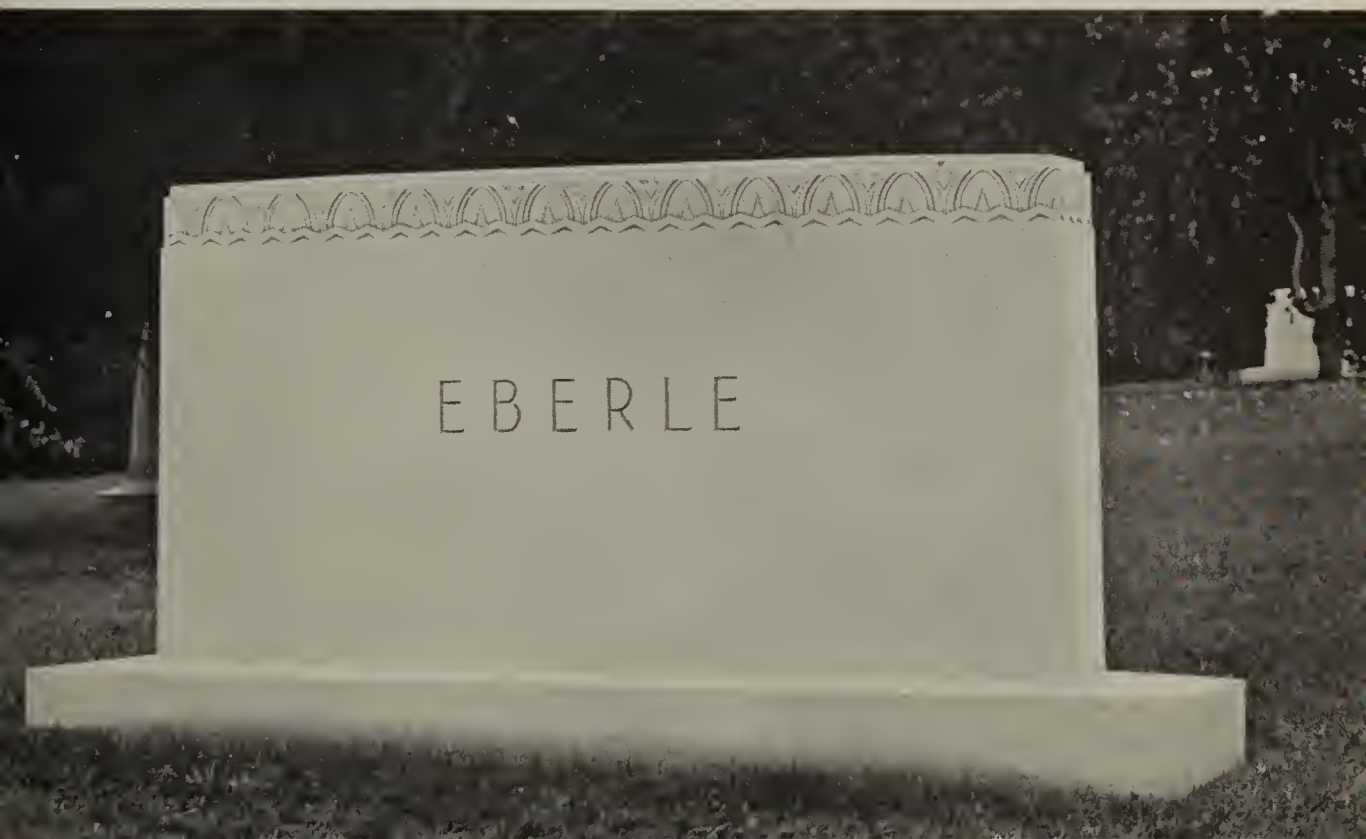

Reference may again be made to the acceptability of Contemporary Design, when properly controlled. Some recollection of detail of classic origin is usually reflected in modern design. Here the band of dentils, traditionally a sub-cornice course, has been adopted as a crowning motif. The family name and the quotation inspired by the Scriptures, asymmetrically positioned, are nicely balanced,—the larger and heavier letters of the name compensating for the greater mass of smaller characters. PL28574 for M. C. Zederbaum of New York City.

HORIZONTAL TABLETS— CONTEMPORARY DETAIL

The great patronage enjoyed by Presbrey-Leland is reassuring to members of its design staff, who may occasionally question whether the native refinement their work reflects is adequately appreciated. Again the classic lines of the Eberle tablet are eloquent testimony to their instinctive feeling for "lines." Granted that any two pieces of stone, so set up, do "make a monument," one can hardly fail to appreciate the touch of the artist in this tablet of impressive proportion. The treatment of the crowning fascia is simply executed—relatively inexpensive. PL35491 designed and furnished for M. Eberle, of New York City.

59

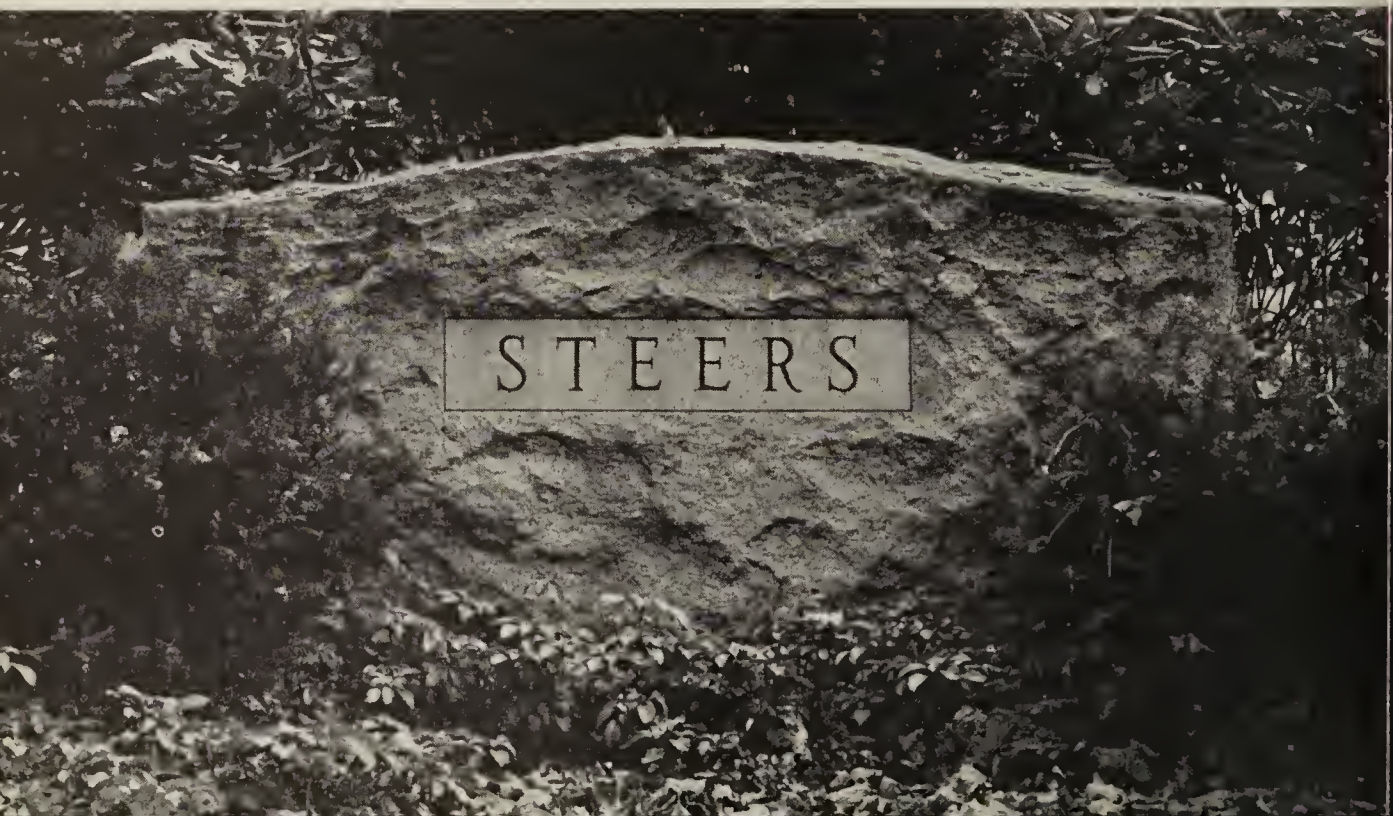

Resourcefulness, imagination and sentiment are prime requisites in memorial art—qualities which distinguish the work of Presbrey-Leland designers. This picturesque boulder, for example, was removed from the family estate and placed on the cemetery plot. The applied bronze Cross, skillfully modelled by a Presbrey-Leland sculptor, was given a rustic effect in harmony with the rock. PL29092 for the Estate of Frederick M. Hilton, Briarcliff, N. Y.

HORIZONTAL MONOLITHS— NATURAL AND ROCK-FACE

Perhaps one of the most controversial topics with the memorial designer-representative is the desirability of the rock-face surface. As leaders in the field of memorial design, Presbrey-Leland tacitly indicates its preference for other finishes, in the overwhelming preponderance of designs adopting them. A mere glance through the illustrations affords eloquent testimony. Somewhat more economical to produce, the rough-hewn surface can be most effective if artistically treated. The examples on these pages suggest the success with which the avoidance of tool-marks and "quarry-split" surfaces, inevitable characteristics of poor craftsmanship, can bring a desirable result. PL40742 for the Estate of N. I. Steers, White Plains, N. Y.

Like the monolith on the opposite page, this two-piece tablet uses the rough finish except for the hammered panel on the face of the die. Especially important is it to merge the smooth surface into the rough without the disfiguring "point-marks," common in a memorial of inferior quality. Note also the success with which the general contour has been preserved and the objectionably jagged projections avoided. PL40160 for Mr. Paul B. Badger, Greenwich, Conn.

HORIZONTAL TABLETS— ROCK-FACE SURFACE

Notable in the work of Presbrey-Leland is the ability to employ every possible device for economy without loss of refinement. Here the rock-face surfaces, the simple incised line, and the sand-treated decorative panels, all contribute to the most stringent economy. Yet the Presbrey-Leland designers look with satisfaction upon the finished product. A happy composition of the design elements reflect the talents of the artist,—excellent craftsmanship, the ability of the artisan. PL35184 for Irving Markham, of New York City.

61

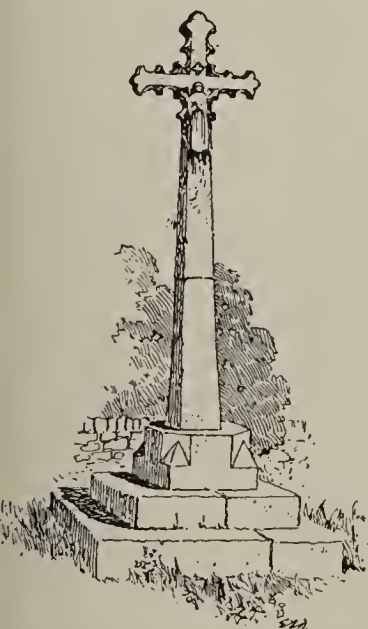

Described as the largest monolithic Cross in the world, this inspiring memorial epitomizes the sublimity of the Cross as a commemorative symbol of the Christian faith. Towering to a total height of thirty feet, including the Calvary base, the Cross proper was carved from a single block of granite weighing more than seventy-four tons. Adorned with sculptured Passion Flower in cruciform arrangement, this superb memorial by Presbrey-Leland has been praised as an outstanding example of commemorative art in America. PL25261 for Kenneth White, Esq., Winchendon, Mass.

THE CROSS

REGARDLESS of sect or creed, the Cross is the chosen symbol of Christianity and as such it is traditionally one of the most significant and appropriate of all memorials. Every style or period of art since the dawn of the Christian era offers typical Crosses which are today reproduced or adapted for the cemetery memorial. Notable among these are the Celtic Crosses, rich in symbolical carvings; the Gothic Wayside and Churchyard Crosses, so beautiful in architectural detail; and the Calvary, Latin or Passion Crosses, the most simple and often the most appealing of all. The fact that Crosses are usually supported by a relatively small base and that they range in design from the simple to the ornate, makes it possible to adapt the memorial Cross to almost any appropriation or plot. The various major types of the memorial Cross are here shown together with a few Erect Cross Tablets on which the Chosen Symbol is carved in relief.

14th Century Cross in Derbyshire. These lovely Gothic Churchyard and Wayside Crosses of ancient England are commanding a belated appeal here in America.

South Cross at Ahenny, Tipperary in Ireland, Celtic Crosses are variously referred to as Runic, Ionian, Romanesque and High Crosses — incorrectly as "Maltese."

An ancient erect Cross Tablet in Perthshire. These tablets, sometimes called Danish stones, feature the Cross in relief with elaborate Celtic carvings.

The Latin or Cross of Passion is a familiar landmark throughout the Old World. The steps represent the Trinity or the three Christian virtues, Faith, Hope and Charity.

REPRODUCTIONS OF ANCIENT CELTIC HIGH CROSSES

One of the most stately examples of Celtic art, the Monasterboice Cross in County South, Ireland, was used as a prototype for the superb memorial to the late Monsignor Thomas F. Egan, of Petersburg, Illinois. An outstanding Presbrey-Leland creation, the beautifully conceived Cross bespeaks that rare ability to correctly reproduce a revered original, and to achieve the kind of workmanship that is vital to its success. Exquisitely carved on all four sides, the detail was adapted from the original, as well as the Muiredach, Tihilli, and Ahenny Crosses of Ireland. The Hand of God, the Lamb, or Agnus Dei, the Dove, and the Phenix are used on the Cross-arms; the Chalice is at the crossing—all beautifully appropriate Christian symbols. PL38940 for the Estate of Monsignor Thomas F. Egan, Holy Sepulchre Cemetery, Worth, Illinois.

The so-called Cross of St. Martin on the Isle of Iona is the supreme achievement of Celtic art in stone. This adaptation adheres meticulously to prototype save for no modification, notably in the serpents and other zoomorphic designs on the original. Among the many adaptations of the Cross of St. Martin by Presbrey-Leland are memorials for Mr. Henry van Dyke and the late Bishop Talbot. PL277 designed and erected for W. J. K. Vanston, Esq. of Orange, New Jersey.

ADAPTATIONS OF ANCIENT PROTOTYPES

Other adaptation of the storied Celtic Cross, introducing the Twelve Apostles, the Blessed Virgin and symbols of the Four Évangels. The original model of the Presbrey-Leland Memorial, Kristina Gustafson Scarpieri, sculptor, was exhibited at the Architectural League. PL17395 for Richard H. Smith, Esq., New York City.

Although the Cross has been classified into some four hundred forms, it has but two general and commonly known categories. The Latin or Catholic Cross, basically consists of the plain upright stem and the Cross-arm. The Celtic Cross is recognized by the halo or nimbus at the crossing, and is generally more highly decorative. The accompanying illustration depicts a Presbrey-Leland adaptation of the St. Martin's Cross with simplified ornamentation. Hence it is possible to create a present-day spirit in a traditional and appropriate prototype. PL45058 for the Estate of Edgar J. Bowman, New York City.

The Studios of Presbrey-Leland are eager to serve those inclined to adapt or faithfully reproduce the original Crosses of antiquity. A kind of reverence for the lovely and appealing expressions of the Celtic Art prompts this inclination. However, there is also the natural desire to create new forms, perhaps as appropriate and beautiful as the old, but surely by way of safeguard against the danger of monotonous repetition. Here shown is such an instance. This stately Cross of nice proportions and dignified reserve has no prototype. It has, however, the attributes of the symbolic and richly significant Christian faith. PL29943 for the Estate of Caleb R. Stetson, of New York City.

THE CELTIC CROSS— MODERN VARIANT AND REPRODUCTION

One of the most exquisite and more unusual examples of Celtic art is the Cross at Inverary, Argyllshire, Scotland. Standing ten feet high in the original, it nevertheless lends itself to a marked reduction of scale. The delicacy and grace of composition are equally well expressed in this Cross of but seven feet in height. Erected to honor the late Walker Gwynne, Rector of Calvary Parish in Summit, N. J., this charming and appropriate tribute was fittingly erected in the Church courtyard. PL28144.

The spiritual splendor of the Gothic style is reflected in the English Churchyard Crosses of the 13th-15th centuries. These Crosses afford a welcome departure from the prevailing Celtic and Latin forms in our cemeteries. A charming example is here illustrated, reflecting the skill of the Presbrey-Leland designers, who adapted the old Cross at Madley, Herts County to this, its gratifying counterpart. The Crucifix is carved monolithically with the shaft. A tooled finish suggests the old and weathered surface of the original. PL31215 for William C. Martens, of Bronxville, N. Y.

GOTHIC WAYSIDE AND CHURCHYARD CROSSES

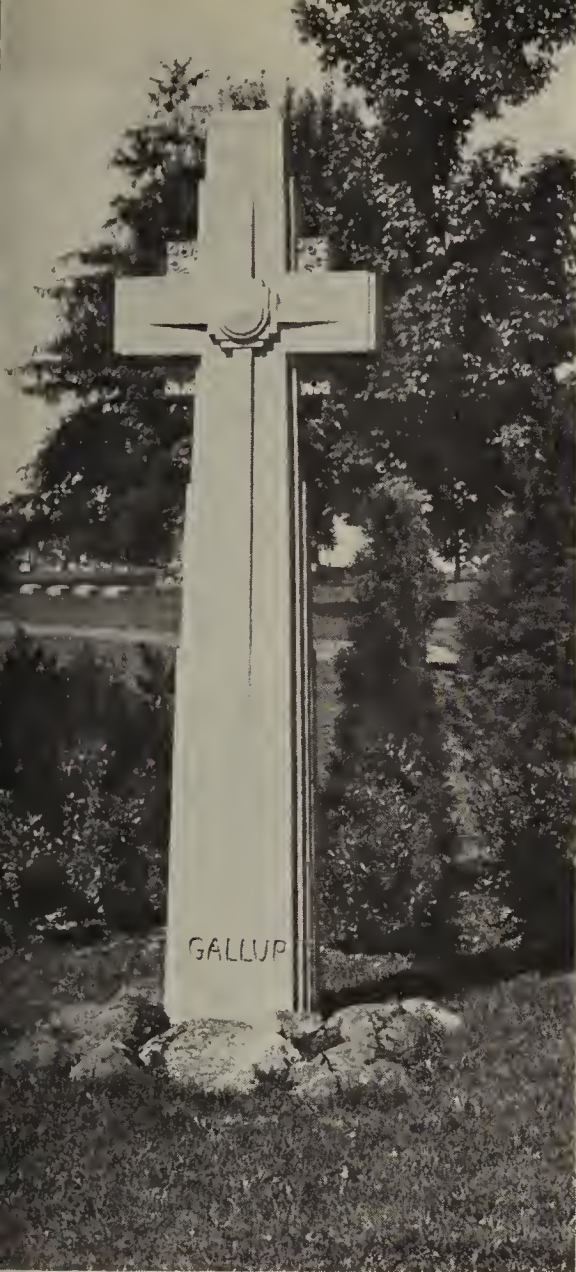

This example of the Churchyard Cross was adapted from the "Ampney Crucis," near Cirencester, England. Delicate in the extreme, this superb memorial was rendered in Italian travertine, a medium both highly resistant to the elements and receptive to the working of the intricate and lace-like detail of the Cross-head. This remarkable Presbrey-Leland creation bespeaks a talent unique in the field of stone carving. PL25815 for Victor Sutro, Esq., of New York City.

THE WHEEL CROSS AND CELTIC VARIANT

In this modern variant of the Celtic Cross, Presbrey-Leland designers have introduced symbols of the Four Evangelists together with the Chi Rho monogram on the Cross which is supported by the Three Steps of the Calvary base. Significant, simple and dignified in design, this memorial Cross commemorates the family of the Right Reverend William T. Manning, of New York. PL33317.

The degree to which a traditional prototype is modified in an adaptation by Presbrey-Leland is sometimes determined by the purpose of the memorial. Here an ancient "wheel-Cross" headstone in Cornwall, England was developed into a free-standing monolithic Cross, suitable for a family plot. The original stood approximately three feet in height and comprised only the Cross proper, mounted upon a simple plinth. Here the ingenuity of the Presbrey-Leland designer has made it possible to create a stately and unified composition of the Cross and supporting shaft. Presbrey-Leland 38543 for the Estate of Frederic J. Fuller, New York City.

While reproductions of the antique are always interesting and often peculiarly appropriate, nevertheless creative design must be encouraged and memorials of our day should reflect something of our culture and progress. Hence by resourcefulness, adaptation and intelligent eclecticism Presbrey-Leland designers have created many variants of the ancient Cross which, like this example, conservatively reflect the current trend in architectural design. PL27640 designed and erected for Mrs. John M. Gallup of Hartford, Conn.

MODERN VARIANTS OF THE CELTIC CROSS

The modern architecture has influenced the design of this unique memorial Cross by Presbrey-Leland. The three bands or offsets adorning the border of the Cross together with the Three Steps of the Calvary base recall the Trinity. Sculptured symbols of the Four Evangelists are positioned at the intersections of the crossing. PL33469 for John M. DeVoe, Esq., Greenwich, Conn.

Reflecting a note of quiet and dignified majesty, this unique Cross is especially effective in its setting of evergreens at Gate of Heaven Cemetery in Westchester County. The wheel is exquisitely executed from an interesting composition,—the adoring angels carved in bas relief at the crossing, and the nimbus bearing the Latin quotation in five words happily accommodated between the Cross-arms,—“Requiem Aeternam Dona Eis Domine”—(Eternal rest grant to them, O Lord). The stratified granite is a most appropriate medium and invites the antique finish so fitting for this type of memorial. PL38829 for Andrew J. Haire, of New York City.

WHEEL CROSS AND CELTIC ADAPTATION

This charming Cross, designed for Dr. Baker, is without traditional prototype. Far more reminiscent of the ancient Crosses than the Gallup memorial previously illustrated, it nevertheless is recognized instantly as an intentional divestment of traditional influence. Characterized by ornament of Christian source, the primary attribute is one of grace and delicacy, with an interesting rhythm working out of the repeated grape-leaf rosettes. PL31245 for Raymond DeWight Baker, M. D. of Summit, N. J.

Appealing grace and simplicity distinguish this adaptation of an ancient Celtic Cross at Knapdale in Argyllshire. The proportions, silhouette and rockery base adhere to prototype but the carving has been confined to a boss at the Crossing and a panel of interlacing below the name, thus attaining a distinctive note of individuality. PL23479 for Mrs. Hedwig Wilkes at Tarrytown, New York.

CELTIC VARIANTS— ANCIENT AND MODERN

Occasionally the Cross, manifestly vertical in mass, may suggest a need for accenting features at the side, in order that the ensemble may properly embrace the width of the plot. Here the low, severe blocks achieve the desired effect esthetically, and at the same time can appropriately be used as benches. A tooled finish of the variegated granite used for this graceful treatment removes the "hard and fast" effect of many more commonplace productions. PL39102 for the Estate of Franklin J. Myers, of Hillsdale, N. J.

THE LATIN CROSS— TRINITY BASE AND MONOLITHIC

The Latin Cross, distinguishable by its more literal representation of the Cross of Christ, is often unornamental, and mounted on an appropriate Trinity base. This example bears the figure of Our Lord carved monolithically with the Cross, comprising the true Crucifix,—a beautifully significant religious symbol. Obviously, work of this nature, wrought in stone, demands the services of the most skilled modellers and carvers. PL27242 for the Estate of Mrs. C. T. Shanley, Newark, N. J.

Observations upon the wisdom of using the rockface finish have been made elsewhere. Some have suggested that it is more appropriate for a Cross, no doubt due to a natural association of the rough surface with the concept of the "Old Rugged Cross." Here the rough finish has been artistically rendered, and the strong, massive proportions impart a note of timeless stability. It is difficult to deprecate the unfinished surfaces in such an instance, despite the lack of traditional authenticity. PL31958 for Mrs. James W. Johnson, of New Haven, Conn.

THE LATIN CROSS— MODERN AND TRADITIONAL

The inspiring Stephano family memorial is almost unique in the designing experience of Presbrey-Leland. Assuming the outline of the Cross Patonce, a form usually reserved for Altar Crosses and other miniature representations, the towering height affords the opportunity for the required scale, and eliminates the potential objection of attempting to render in stone a design of too delicate a nature. Exacting study of the gently curved silhouette was an essential of the success of this majestic memorial. PL45638 for the Estate of Constantine and Penelope Stephen Stephano, Philadelphia, Pa.

Reference has been made to the burial plot in Rushville, Indiana, dedicated to the late Wendell L. Willkie, whose brilliant career suddenly came to so untimely an end. Here a handsome Latin Cross forms the feature of a charmingly informal area, supplemented by the storied recumbent slab (page 35) and a stone bench, all designed in harmonious simplicity. Presbrey-Leland intensively urges appropriate personalization of memorials. This stately Cross, bearing only the composite symbol recalling Mr. Willkie's selfless participation in the crusade for freedom, is indeed a fitting tribute to this gentleman of great character. PL42450 for Mrs. Wendell Willkie.

The memorial erected to the great pianist and composer, Sergei Rachmaninoff may impress the layman as oddly designed. Actually, it is an example of the Eastern Cross, correctly used only in connection with the Eastern Orthodox Church. The origin of the lower arm, placed aslant on the stem, has never been positively established, though many quaint theories have been advanced. Tradition has, however, fixed it not only as a basic element of the Cross, but has established its length, position, and angle. The simple benches complete an interesting and well conceived ensemble. PL39466 for the Estate of Sergei Rachmaninoff.

THE CROSS AS A CENTRAL MOTIVE AND ENSHRINED

As the delicate Cross Patonce is protectively enshrined in the niche of Gothic detail, so the very memorial seems in turn to be enshrined in the exquisite setting of nature's splendor. A marked departure from the customary memorials done in fabricated stone of uniform texture, this unique creation is rendered in limestone and variegated seam-face granite. It is regrettable that the illustration must forego the representation of the color effects, for the symphony of harmonious tones,—golds, greys, and buffs, is charming beyond appreciation, in the background of blending greens. PL37729 for Henry Rolf of New York City.

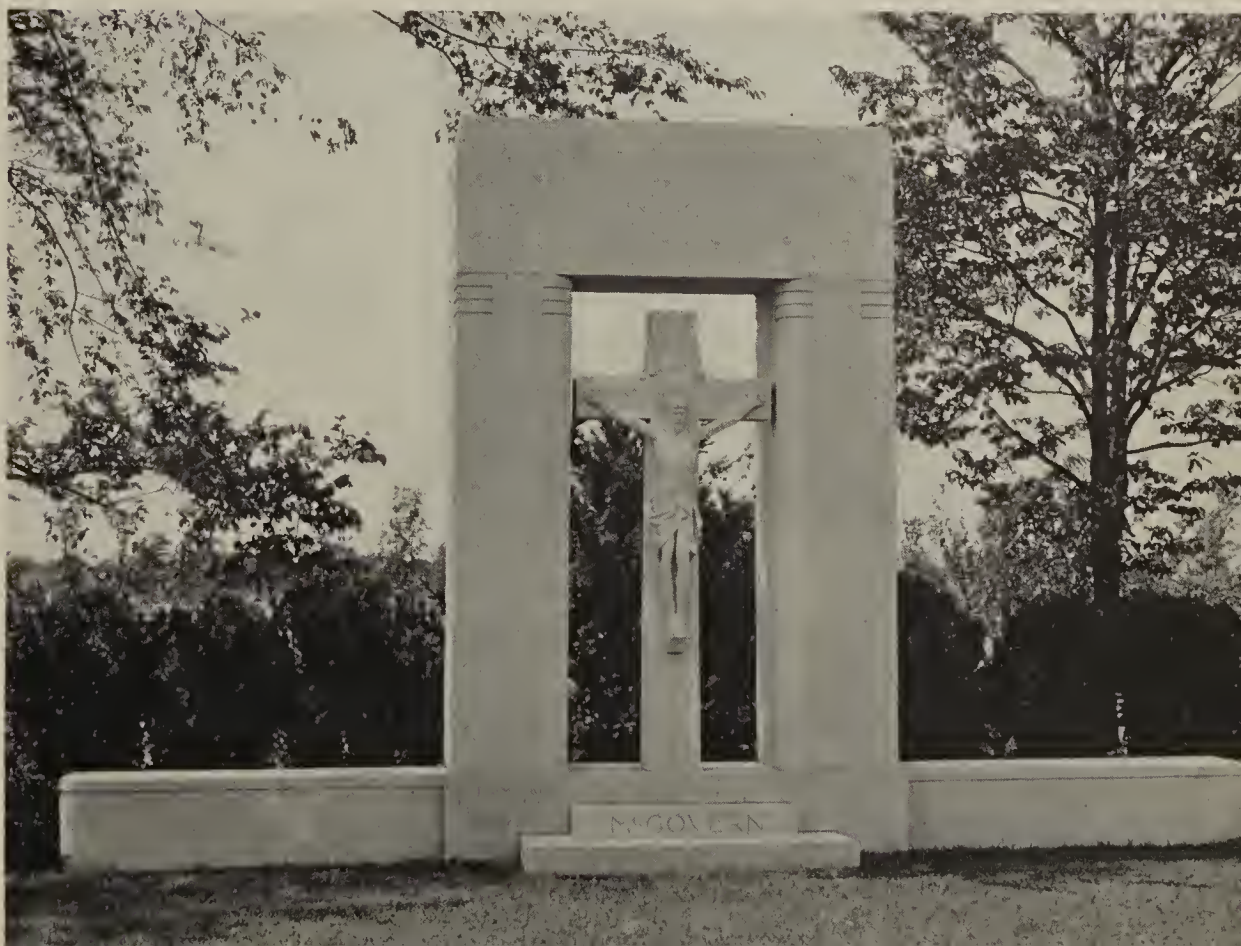

Sentiment, tradition and spiritual significance are admirably expressed in this beautiful Gothic shrine—a notable contribution to the art of the monument in America. Taking for their theme the wayside shrines of the Old World, Presbrey-Leland architects have combined this motive with the Gothic detail of the Landmark, Sanctuary, Preaching, and the spire-shaped so-called Eleanor Crosses of England. The result is a distinctive memorial in which a freestanding bronze Cross is enshrined in a lovely and significant setting. PL22331 for Henry D. Vining, Esq., Springfield, Mass.

THE CROSS ENSHRINED— GOTHIC AND MODERN DETAIL

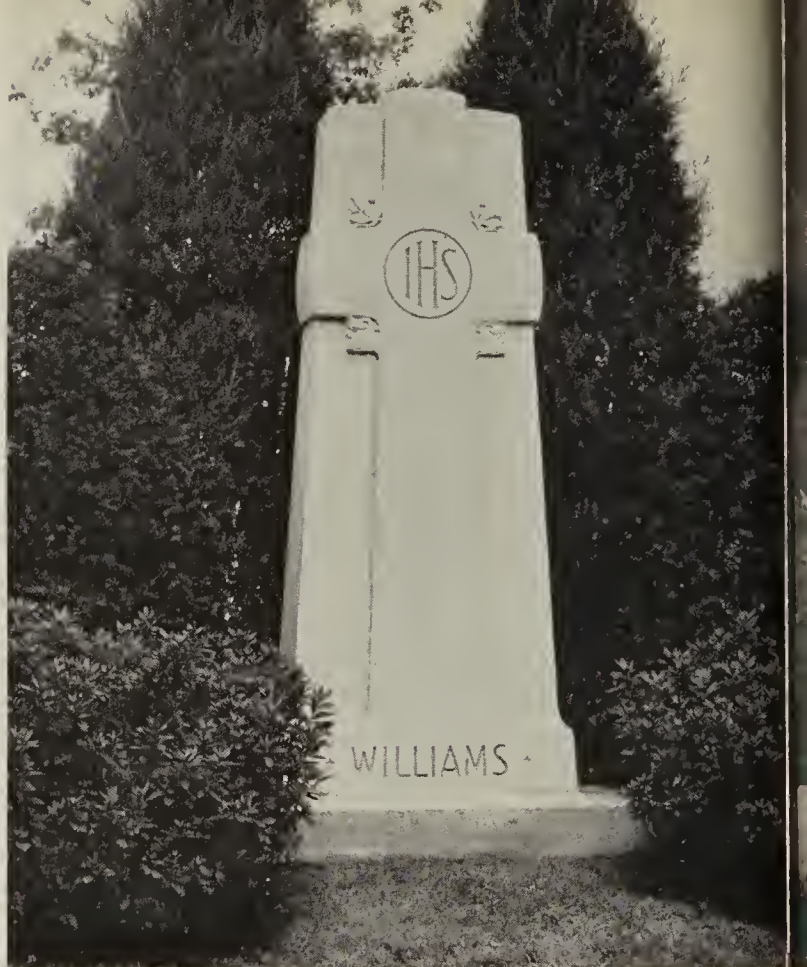

Enshrining a Crucifix of the "Triumphant Christ," this memorial is a modern adaptation of the ancient pylon. The Corpus is a superb example of Ecclesiastical sculpture and one typical of the skill and feeling with which Presbrey-Leland artisans transform unyielding granite into works of art. Here again the Modern architecture is effectively used in attaining dignified simplicity. Note the simple decoration of the two piers, merely a combination of incised lines, and yet how effective. Landscape settings, such as this, are a feature of the service Presbrey-Leland offer to their patrons. PL30054 for the Estate of Patrick McGovern, New York City.

ERECT CROSS TABLETS— AUTHENTIC REPRODUCTIONS

The Cross tablet, often designed to reflect a traditional prototype, is also readily adaptable to a more modern, and generally simpler, treatment. Here is nicely exemplified the natural relationship existing between the vertical mass of the Cross and the upright tablet. Observe the interesting manner in which the arms of the Cross extend slightly beyond the tablet outline, lending added prominence to the Cross form. PL41546 for Mrs. Mildred Knust, of New York City.

The Cross tablet antedated the free-standing Cross in the development of the Christian Celtic era. Often crude erect tablets were decorated with a simple incised Cross in the earliest stages of the period. Here Presbrey-Leland has created a fitting tribute to a family of Irish origin, in using an adaptation of the lovely old Killamery Cross, carving an accurately reproduced outline on the face of the vertical tablet, finished to receive the Cross appropriately. The reverse batter of the uppermost base, a feature of the original, has caused speculation as to whether the Cross may have been overturned and the stone inverted in the process of restoration. PL30383 for Mrs. Gustave A. Schrock, of New York City.

ERECT CROSS TABLETS— CONTEMPORARY AND TRADITIONAL

One of the most delicately executed headstone Crosses in the Presbrey-Leland treasury is this exquisite tribute to the late Robert Charles Cecil St. George. The Studios welcomed the exacting criticism with which Mrs. St. George reviewed the drawings, tentative and final, the full-size model, and the carvers' rendition of the model in stone. To Mrs. St. George, whom Presbrey-Leland respectfully characterizes as a perfectionist, goes much of the credit for a supremely satisfying interpretation of the revered little Cross tablet at Conchan, on the Isle of Man. PL46980 for Mrs. R. C. St. George, New York City.

Here again the desirability of reference to traditional sources for inspiration, is emphasized. Present-day talent in the world of design is ample, but one immediately experiences an unique reaction to a memorial of this nature where the quaint and rambling ornament of Celtic origin manifestly establishes it as springing from the hallowed ranks of history. A charming old headstone Cross in a churchyard at Aberlemno, Scotland, furnished the inspiration. PL22859 for the Estate of J. E. Overholtzer, Norristown, Pa.

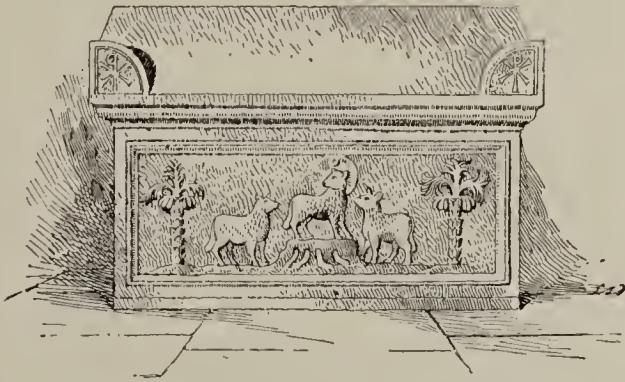

For stateliness, monumental dignity and solemnity, no type of memorial quite rivals the classic sarcophagus of antiquity. Brought to a high degree of architectural beauty by the Romans, these ancient sepulchres remain to this day a favoured motif for the cemetery memorial. In the monument here illustrated, situated on a family plot one acre in area, the central feature is a monument of the sarcophagus type which in form recalls the temple-like examples at Sidon (see plate opposite). The detail is adapted from an altar in the Temple of Æsculapius at Pompeii. Sculptured amphorae or state vessels, together with benches are used as accessories. Hughes and Hall, Architects. PL 17270 for George S. Dearborn, Esq., at Rye, New York.

THE SARCOPHAGUS

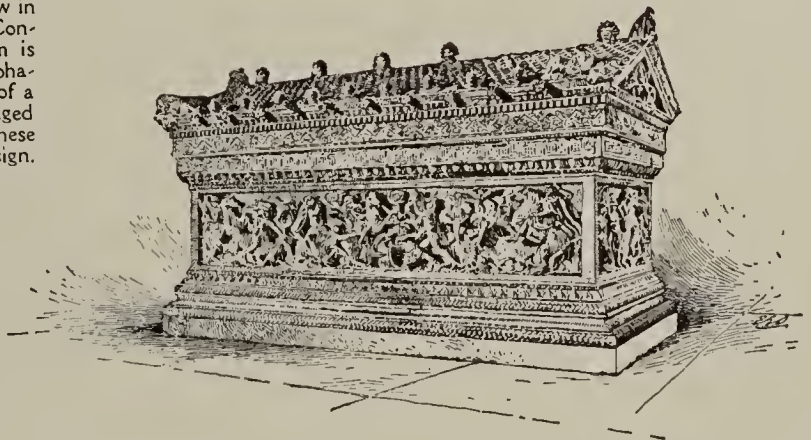

SARCOPHAGI were undoubtedly used by the Egyptians prior to the building of the Great Pyramid, but it was not until after the days of Trajan that the Greeks and Romans produced the monumental and richly sculptured examples which are found in the museums of Europe today. While the Middle Ages afford many magnificent Gothic sarcophagi, it remained for the Renaissance to bring the design of these sepulchral monuments to its highest development with the work of masters like Michelangelo. In America the sarcophagus rarely is used for actual entombment—serving merely as a monument for the plot. During the last quarter of the 19th century it was decidedly the most prevalent of all memorials in our cemeteries—too often ponderous and over-elaborated. Consonant with the trend away from bulk of stone and extravagant ornament, the better sarcophagi today are less cumbersome, supported by low bases, somewhat elongated in proportions and treated with historic ornament of Egyptian, Greek, Roman, Gothic, Renaissance and Modern source.

Sarcophagus at Ravenna from the tomb of Galla Placidia, daughter of Theodosius the Great and wife of Constantinus—a work of the 5th Century, A.D. The more elaborate sarcophagi of later date were placed in the Vaults, called Catacombs after a district of that name in Rome.

At Sidon, in ancient Phoenicia, was found this magnificent so-called sarcophagus of Alexander, superbly enriched with ornament and sculpture—the work of Greek artists of the 4th Century, B.C.—now in the Imperial Ottoman Museum at Constantinople. Nearby in the Museum is the "Tomb of the Weepers," a sarcophagus of the same period in the form of a miniature Ionic Temple with engaged columns. Hence the inference that these sarcophagi simulated the temple in design.

The Colonial style in America was directly influenced by the contemporary Anglo-Classic and Georgian periods of the late Renaissance in England. Indeed, the tombs and headstones of the 18th and early 19th Centuries in America were largely reproductions, and often importations, of English work. Tombs of sarcophagi similar to this illustration are found in the churchyards and burying grounds of New England and Southern states. This example is a reproduction of an English churchyard tomb in Hampstead Parish Church, Middlesex, dated 1777. For Horace Trumbauer, Architect, Philadelphia, Pa. PL24237.

SARCOPHAGI— GEORGIAN AND CLASSIC DETAIL

Many contend that the elegance and majesty of the sarcophagus of classic origin is unrivalled in the realm of memorial design. Consideration of cost being a common deterrent to this relatively expensive form, it cannot be contested that the imposing mass of this stately Presbrey-Leland creation reflects a rare degree of taste and refinement. It cannot be too often emphasized that the knowledge and appreciation of composition and detail, over which there is a constant vigil at the Studios of Presbrey-Leland, spells the difference between a true work of art and a sad misadventure in design. PL19777 for John A. S. Brown, Philadelphia.

Altar-tombs, as the term implies, had their origin in the table or mensa upon which the early Christians offered the eucharistic sacrifice—a ceremony often of necessity performed on Catacomb tombs. Came then the custom of interring martyrs' remains beneath Church altars—hence the altar tomb. Protestantism abandoned the altar, substituting the communion table. Whether the table-tomb, which resembles the altar-tomb, had its origin in the communion table cannot be stated for fact. This reproduction of a 13th Century Altar Tomb in York Cathedral is grouped among sarcophagi in this booklet for convenience as a kindred type. PC6929 for the Estate of James Brown in Old Lyme, Connecticut.

GOTHIC ALTAR-TOMB AND RENAISSANCE ADAPTATION

For sheer architectural beauty and refinement of classic detail, this sarcophagus by Presbrey-Leland rivals the delicate detailing which characterized the work of master craftsmen during the Renaissance, and of our own Colonial architects. Adopting grouped pilasters for his motif, the designer here attains elegance and scale by a compact treatment of all mouldings and projections. Note the exquisite refinement of the denticulated cornice or crown moulding, the minuteness of detail in other mouldings and in the pilaster capitals. PL17828 for the Estate of Henrietta H. Caskey, Washington, D. C.

It is the function of mouldings and panels, in Gothic architecture, to multiply parallel lines of light and shade thus accentuating that vertical elongation which distinguishes the style. The same principle may be applied with telling effect by using these panels and mouldings to emphasize the horizontal form of the sarcophagus. In this example, for instance, the Gothic mouldings of the base, the panelling and the band of carving all give an interesting play of light and shade which accentuates the impressive horizontal mass of the monument. PL18550 for H. T. Ambrose, Esq., Orange, New Jersey.

SARCOPHAGI—GOTHIC AND RENAISSANCE DETAIL

Like memorials of other types, the sarcophagus today is modified in mass, simplified in detail, and the proportions tend toward a more elongated form. An outstanding refinement is the subordination of the cap-stone or entablature. This is a logical and altogether desirable modification, for with the trend toward less bulk of stone it is imperative to avoid the elaborate decoration and heavy projection of the entablature on the large Classic and Renaissance sarcophagi. This example typifies the modern treatment of the cap-stone—reduced to a simple corona with slight projection. The dentils below this cornice and the base-moulds are properly refined. PL19096 for Oscar Kohn, Esq., in Orange, N. J.

In contour, mass and detail, this stately memorial embodies all the elements of effect and refinement which distinguish the sarcophagus of today from its ancient prototype. Studied simplicity of design, accentuated horizontality of mass, refinement of detail and rhythmical flow of line are here combined with impressive results. The Modern note is expressed not so much by the introduction of new detail as it is in the resourceful adaptation of old motifs. The massiveness of ancient sarcophagi gives way to an accentuated elongation consistent with the graceful flow of line which distinguishes the Modern style. How beautifully the lines of the memorial compose with the environs! PL34417 for the Estate of Ernest Fahnestock, Shrewsbury, N. J.

SARCOPHAGI—MODERN AND CLASSIC VARIANT

In modifications and refinements, this stately example of the modern sarcophagus represents the ultimate development of the type here in America. The projecting cornice is omitted and in its place a band of carved laurel is used. The plinth is reduced in height but the projection is increased to effect a nice transition from the vertical surfaces to the low, wide-spreading platform. It is in this subordination of the base and elongation of the sarcophagus proper that contemporary designers have attained an elegance of line and proportions which recalls the chaste refinement and simple dignity of Greek architecture. A noteworthy detail is the superbly modelled laurel, symbol of atonement and glory, here significantly springing from the Cross. PL22912 for the Estate of Cornelius P. Young of White Plains, N. Y.

One precept of memorial design which must be constantly observed, is relating mass and proportion to the type being developed. Here, for instance, a refined example of the classic sarcophagus shows to superb advantage, while an attempt to reduce the sizes materially, even in direct proportion, would produce unsatisfactory results. Presbrey-Leland designers are repeatedly exercising caution against requests for a memorial of this classification, for example, in sizes appropriate for a two-grave plot. Simpler, less involved designs are better adapted to smaller areas. Moreover, it will be noted that the cornice and base mouldings are here restrained, keeping them in tune with the scale which is not so great as that of the more elaborate and more pretentious example shown on page 80. PL25457 for Mrs. Charles G. Smith, of Stamford, Conn.

SARCOPHAGI—CLASSIC VARIANT AND MONOLITHIC

Monumental architecture in the larger sense of the word, had its origin in the primitive monoliths like those reared at Stonehenge and Carnac. And throughout the ages man has found an appeal in work wrought from a single block of stone. The unity, completeness and sense of permanence are intrinsic attributes instinctively felt in the monolithic type. The Sarcophagus, being massive in form, is particularly adapted to monolithic treatment. The vanishing panel and a band of passion flowers are used to enrich the surface of this memorial. PL24183 for Mrs. C. B. Riker South Orange, N. J.

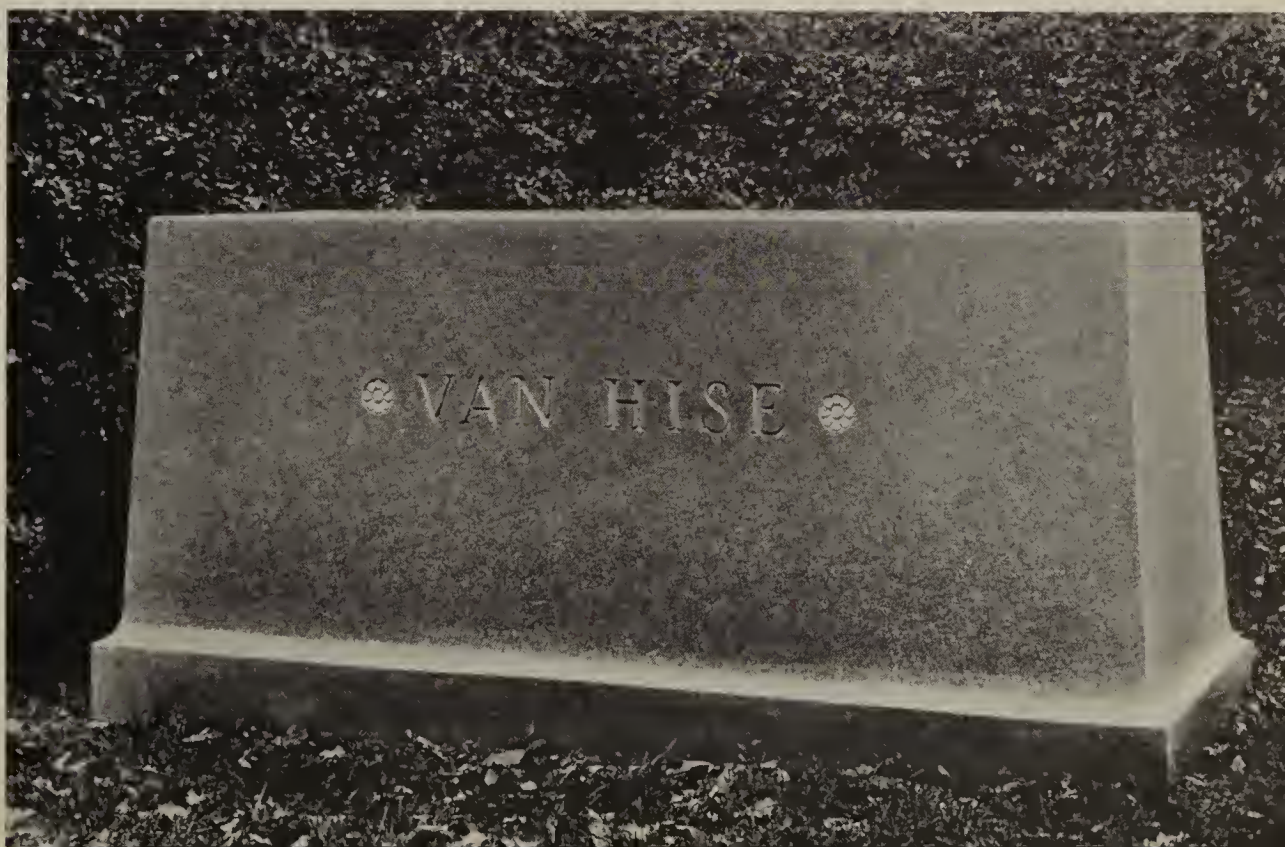

The polished surface, widely used in America during the late 19th Century, gave way to the traditional hammered or cut finish when polished granite became too common and when the demand for creative design and better architecture restored the use of mouldings which are costly to polish and decorations which are not adapted to the finish. To be sure, the combination of polished and hammered surfaces offered a solution but the contrast is too striking. The best examples are entirely polished and therefore essentially simple in design like this memorial. PL19158 for Burton S. Castles, Esq., New York City.

THE POLISHED SARCOPHAGI WITH BASE AND MONOLITHIC

Now that the hammered or fine-axed surface is so prevalent in our cemeteries, the all-polished surface offers a desirable colour contrast in some sections of the grounds. Moreover the high finish used on granites of interesting texture and tone is not without an element of quiet elegance and distinction. These qualities together with the individuality of the monolithic form, combine to lend dignity and originality to this superbly proportioned sarcophagus. It may here be observed that bronze tablets or applied bronze letters are particularly harmonious with the dark surface of polished stone, notably when the granite has a complementary colour. PL18331 for Mrs. Charles R. Van Hise, Madison, Wisconsin.

85

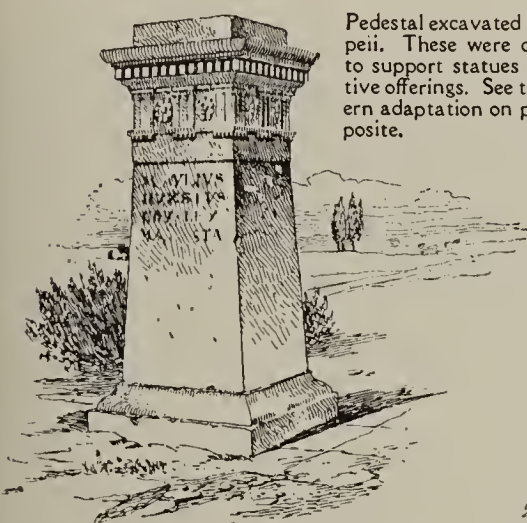

On the opposite leaf appear cuts of ancient pedestal monuments. It will be noted that memorials of this type, square or polygonal in plan, are commonly used as pedestals in the accepted sense of the term; that is, they are designed as a substructure for a vase, statue, or column. Often, however, they are integrally complete in themselves as in the Smith memorial on page 88. In this modern variant of the pedestal type, vertical lines are accentuated, and the urn is used as a finial. The surbase, frieze and cornice are enriched and decorated with mouldings of Renaissance source. PL20447 for Donald Scott, Esq., in Orange, N. J.

PEDESTAL OR SQUARE MONUMENTS

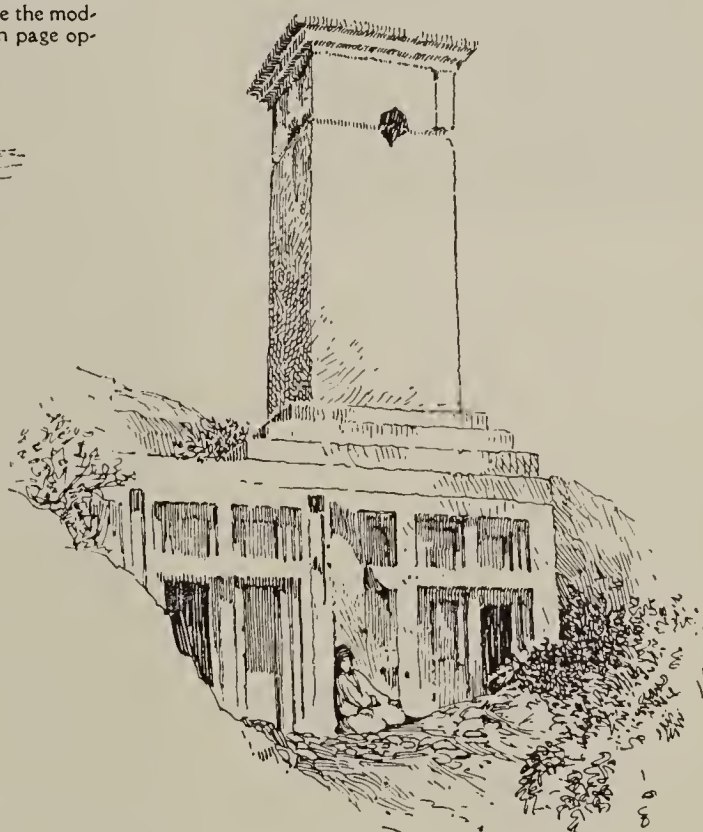

BECAUSE many of the better examples are largely adapted from ancient pedestals, notably of the Roman Era, the term Pedestal Monuments is used in referring to memorials of the type illustrated in this group, which are polygonal in form—usually four-square. The term, however, is not strictly accurate in referring to all square monuments since many memorials of this type have their source in other ancient forms, notably the primitive megalith, the tower tomb, the pagan Roman altar and also details like the post or pier in architecture. Where the site calls for a vertical composition, somewhat more massive than the erect Tablet (see Pages 40-49), the Pedestal Monument offers a solution and one that is particularly desirable where four inscription surfaces of equal importance are desired for several branches of a family. During the closing years of the 19th Century, memorials of this type were extensively used and variously treated with concave surfaces and conglomerate ornament. The better examples today adhere closely to classic prototype. They are most effective when the verticality is accentuated.

Pedestal excavated at Pompeii. These were designed to support statues and votive offerings. See the modern adaptation on page opposite.

The steles of Rome were often nearly square in form and together with the square altars of that era they are used today as prototypes for monuments of the pedestal type. This stele is at Khamissa.

The rock-cut tombs at Lycia, in Asia-Minor, were hewn from the mountainside about the 7th Century B.C. This example was crowned with the lofty pedestal-like tower—hence the name tower-tomb.

THE PEDESTAL MONUMENT— STELE VARIANT AND SQUARE PLAN

An intelligent classification of this memorial might well include it among the stelae illustrated on pages 40-43. Traditionally, however, the stele was slender and slablike, bearing the carved crest on one face only. Here ingenuity has again taken acceptable liberties with the historic prototype, creating a square or pedestal monument with the stele as the basic inspiration. Hence it is properly characterized as a memorial of square plan, and suited to a family plot in which the feature is centrally located. PL30591 for Emil Hirsch of Clifton, N. J.

Reference is made on page 86 to the inspiration for the design of this monument of square plan. Conceived in the true classic tradition, the stately pedestal form proudly displays the impressive line and proportion so essential to correct scale, as well as the authentic entablature with its triglyphs, metopes and dentils,—all precious elements in the grandeur and glory of the Greek and Roman Orders. Many, in a casual consideration, regard such examples outmoded. Many, on the other hand, recognize them as ageless as time itself. PL23236 for C. F. Smith, Holyoke, Mass.

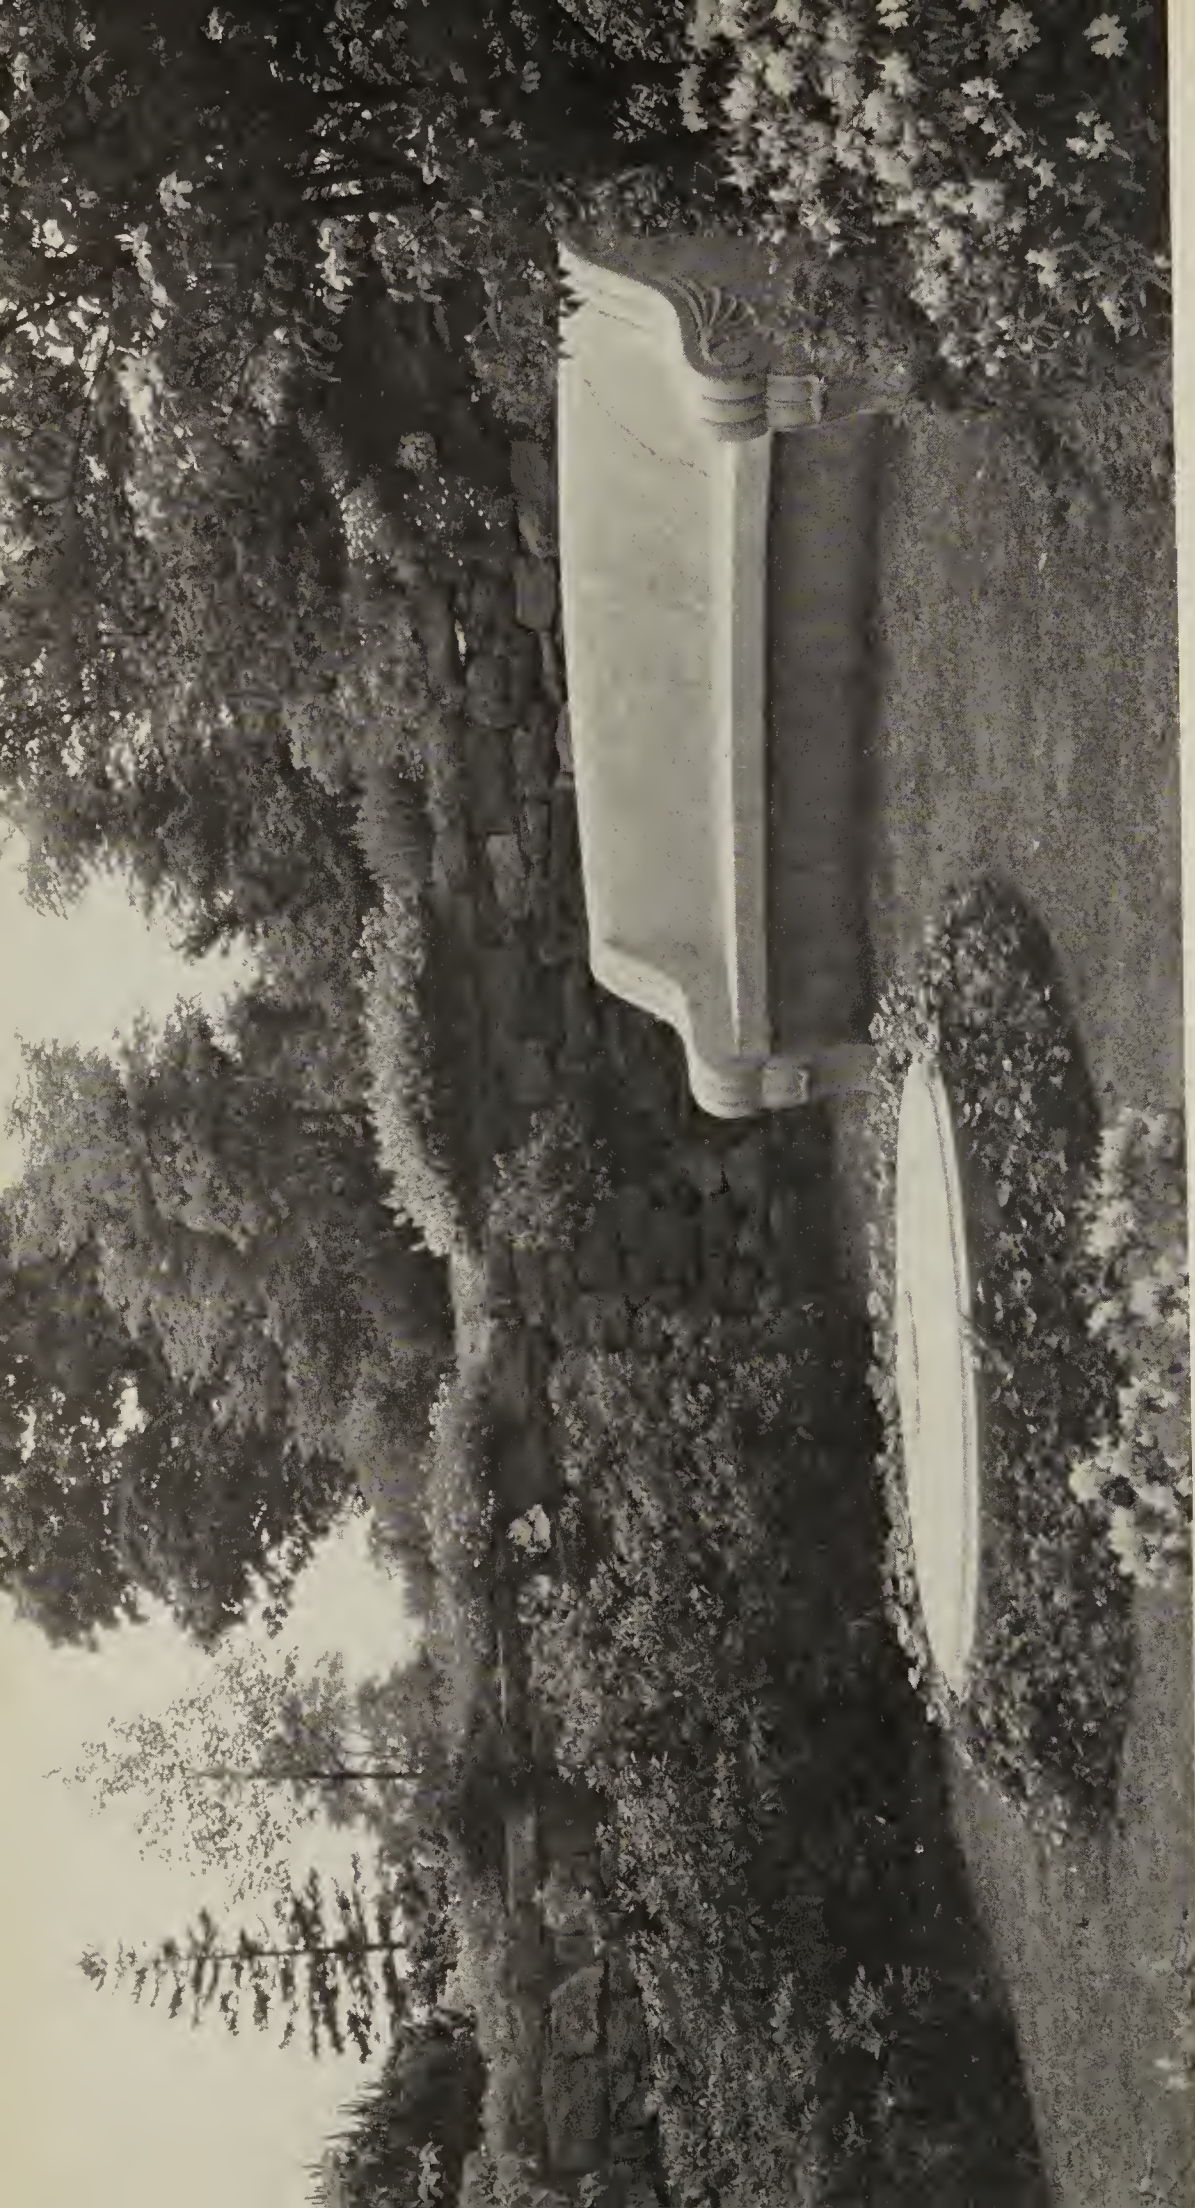

THE PEDESTAL MONUMENT— ELLIPTICAL AND HEXAGONAL PLAN

Occasionally the services of Presbrey-Leland are willingly limited to those of an interpreter. Lucile Robertson Marshall, an eminent artist in her own right, sought the services of the celebrated Paulanship to create the eloquent symbol, which was cast in bronze and plated with gold. Rarely indeed is a more compellingly beautiful personal tribute seen. The hands of the talented young musician are represented as emerging from the empyrean and "clutching at a star",—a touching life story, told in a few brilliant strokes of the artist. Presbrey-Leland is gratified to have played a part in rendering so fine a conception. PL44019 for Mrs. John Marshall, Bronxville, N. Y.

Pedestal monuments may take a polygonal form in plan. Here the base, shaft and crowning urn are hexagonal. A welcome departure in design, there is also a happy association of plan to function, for the memorial is centrally placed in a large area dedicated to six branches of a family, who chose to provide and mark a resting place for future generations. A definite but conservative modern spirit characterizes this stately monument. PL34000 for Joseph Kappel, New York City.

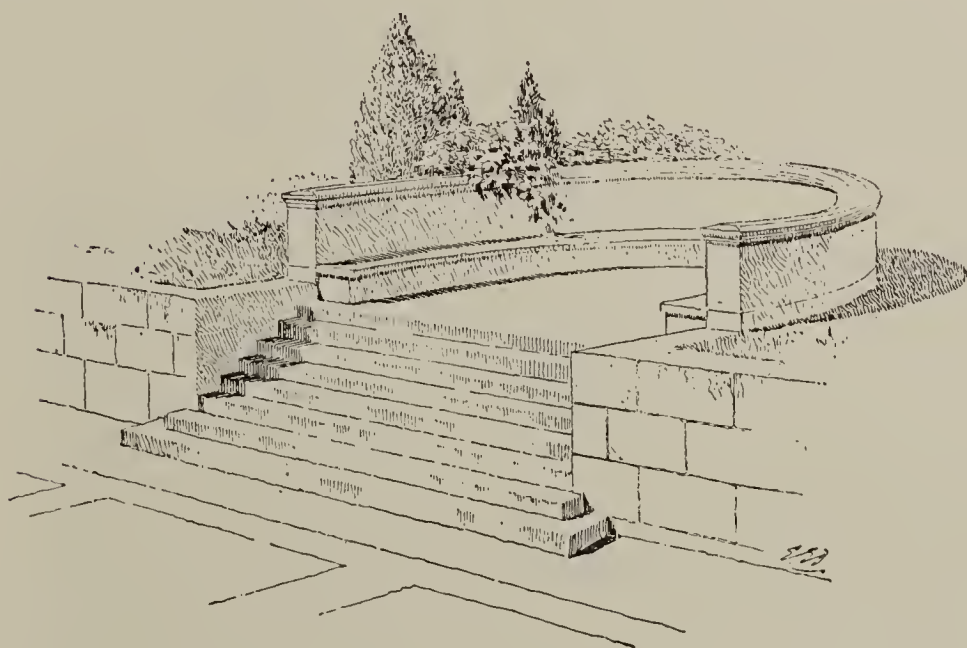

A Garden of Memory! Verdant with trees and shrubs, fragrant with flowers, cloistered in the serene and restful beauty of Nature, this cemetery plot is indeed a haven of repose for those who are gone, and a comfort and consolation for them that are left behind. The early Christians thus planted trees and flowers on the burial place, calling the cemetery Hortus (garden). With this ancient practice as a motif, Presbrey-Leland designers have here placed a modern variant of the classic exedra against a field stone wall, locating the circular columbarium in the center of the superbly landscaped plot. PL32099 for Nils B. Hersloff, Esq., West Orange, N. J.

THE EXEDRA

IN classical archaeology the term exedra refers specifically to a place partly enclosed and roofed over, usually opening from a colonnade and provided with seats. These exedrae were courts and lecture rooms where learned philosophers were wont to foregather, notably in the temple atrium and the palaestrae or gymnasia where disputations were held. The seats were usually semi-circular, or nearly so, and some of the most beautiful examples are found in the rounded apses of Roman basilicas. Its origin as a memorial may be traced to the funeral banquets of antiquity when the exedra was used as a commodious seat, independent of any building. Such is the triclinium funebre of the Romans—an arrangement of three couches and a table which developed into a rectangular seat or exedra. There is an acceptable dignity about the exedra as a memorial—the seat symbolizing repose and providing a place for rest and meditation. Architecturally, because of its form, scale and detail, it is among the most impressive of all monuments. Obviously, a plot of considerable area is desirable, preferably situated on level ground.

Ancient exedra at Assos, a minor Greek city on the Gulf of Adramyrium, explored and excavated by the Archaeological Institute of America in 1881.

EXEDRAE— CONTEMPORARY DESIGN

Experiment and resourceful design are necessary in adapting the exedra to a small plot—and too often the attempt is a failure. The problem is one of composition. Horizontal lines are salient qualities of the well designed exedra. And when the length is contracted without a corresponding reduction in height, the result is awkward. The height cannot be reduced appreciably because the seat proper must remain at the established height of not less than fifteen inches. Hence the problem. An exceptional solution of this problem is illustrated above. The seat proper is pitched forward slightly and finished with a heavy band which tends to make the seat appear lower than fact, thus making possible a lower back or dossier, retaining the horizontal mass. PL30706 for the Estate of William Richard Knobloch of Stamford, Connecticut.

The garden bench, placed against an elongated tablet or screen, is an effective and economical adaptation of the exedra. The seat is made from separate blocks of stone, thus curtailing the cost of stone and labor required in carving the more conventional exedrae which are hewn from monolithic blocks. In this example, Presbrey-Leland designers have been influenced by the Modern architecture in the form and detail of the elongated tablet, notably in the simple incised lines which enrich the ends of the crest band. The standards or supports for the bench slab are given a solidity consistent with the mass of the screen, and they are adorned with carnations. The platform is monolithic. PL30770 for the Estate of Samuel I. Vogelsson of Philadelphia, Pa.

MODERN
AND

Seldom do so many factors contribute to the achievement of a wholly satisfying end, as in the outstanding instance of the Ransom family plot. Nestled in a magnificent natural setting, and resting atop the crown of a slight knoll, this memorial of rare grace and stunning simplicity completes a picture of inspiring beauty and repose. Obviously the perfect development of the flowing lines is the key to success of the composition. Only the hand carved oakwreath, focal feature and epitomic symbol of memory, interrupts the arresting simplicity of design. The construction is monolithic. PL36160 designed and erected for William L. Ransom, New York City.

The simple garden-bench, a seat-slab, supported by two standards, is an appropriate motive for the cemetery memorial, and as such it has been used against a screen or wall, or simply free-standing (see page 114). But the garden-bench is not effective when elongated. There is a sense of weakness in the long span from standard to standard, a particularly unhappy attribute in a cemetery, where any suggestion of instability is properly deprecated. Hence the ingenious introduction of the solid block between the supports which provides a surface for decoration and also immediately affords a sense of stability and dignity. PL32015 for Albert P. Streitmann, in Cincinnati, Ohio.

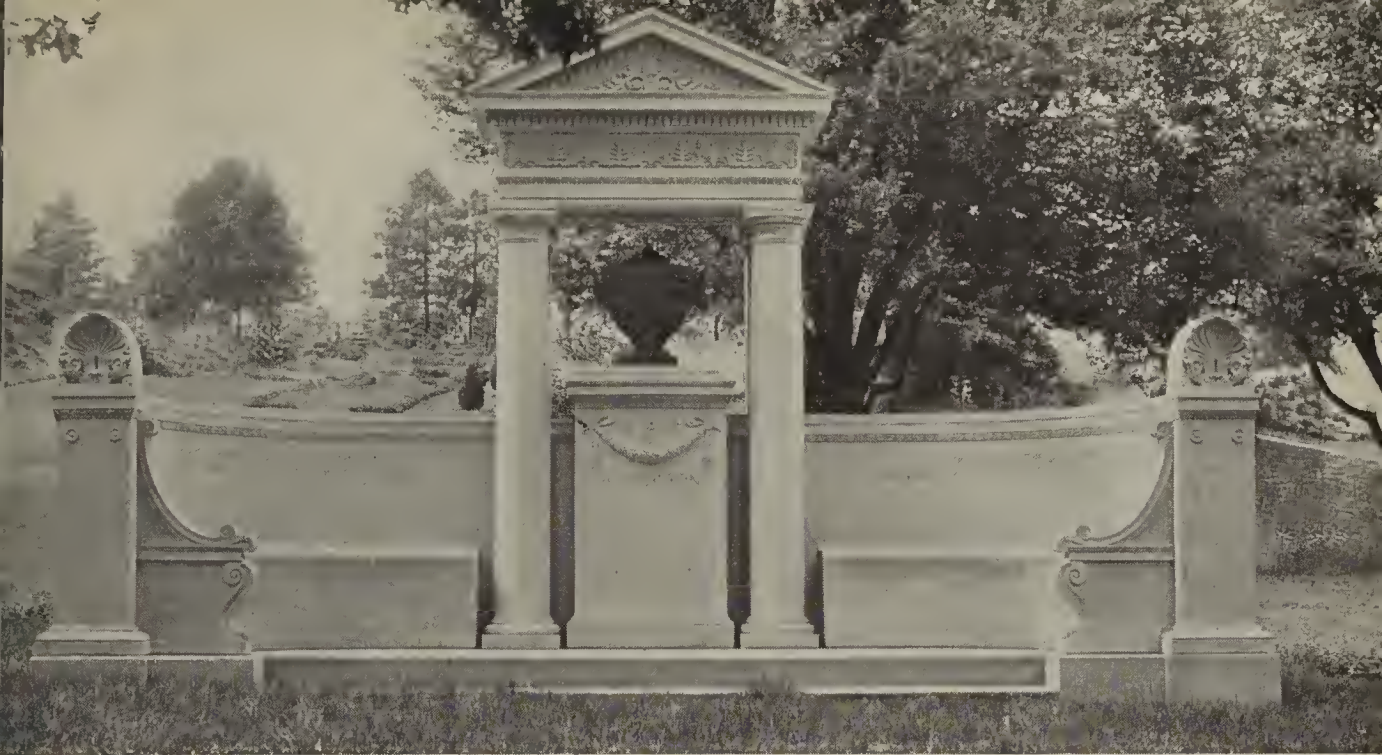

Strange as it may seem, it is nevertheless often true that beauty and individuality go hand in hand with economy. Indeed, one may go so far as to say that the resourceful designer with specialized training and knowledge can always combine the two. Here, for instance, the costly seat block of monumental exedrae has been omitted and in its place a simple garden bench is used against the spreading walls which are relatively slender pieces of stone. Thus the element of important scale and dignity is retained without involving large blocks of granite and costly labor. The result is an altogether distinctive modern type of exedra, well adapted to plots large or small. PC8375 for W. H. McAlister, Esq., New York City.

EXEDRAE—ADAPTATIONS OF ANCIENT TRICLINIUM

As may be assumed, the typical exedra is usually of relatively large scale. Many attempts to reduce the properly designed exedra to a plot of too small an area have resulted in dismal failure. This is true in large measure because the height of the seat is fixed, and failure to achieve the proper relation between the dominant horizontal and vertical elements is almost inevitable. Here is a most interesting and successful conception, in which the mass is great enough to combine the vertical tablet bearing the beautiful and significant bas-relief, with the pronounced horizontality enforced by the seats. There are but two pieces of stone in the entire memorial. The exedra proper, resting upon the separate base slab, is carved from a huge monolith. PL21436 for the Estate of Warner M. Leeds, Tarrytown, N. Y. Helmle, Corbett & Harrison, Architects.

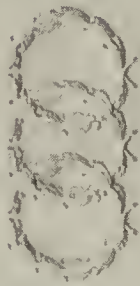

It has been observed in this book that many monuments of antiquity resemble the temple or parts of the temple in form—the altar, gable, door and columned portico, for example, were recurrently adapted in funereal monuments. In this modern adaptation of the exedra, a columnated shrine covering a variant of the classic altar is flanked by elliptical seats with high dossiers terminating in stele-like antae or terminals. The utter refinement of the classic detail and superb craftsmanship revealed in this notable work have invoked repeated comment in journals devoted to the art of working stone. TD5803 for John Anderson, Esq., New York City.

CLASSIC EXEDRAE FOR LARGER PLOTS

It is difficult to imagine an exedra of finer conception or of more exquisitely studied detail than this stately example of Presbrey-Leland designing. Accentuation of horizontal or vertical elements is normal in the finer compositions. However, the elongation of parallel elements can become monotonous. Hence the subtle interruption in the flat line of the top, which also affords an interesting frame for the family name. The consoles and acanthus leaves are beautifully designed and rendered in the authentic classic tradition. PL27222 for the Estate of F. G. Burke, of New York City.

CONNETT • SHERWOOD • HEGELER

Reaching out to span or embrace the interments on a family plot, Memorial Screens are perhaps the most favored of all forms for the more costly family monuments today. Similar to the exedra in mass, but without seats, the screen lends itself to a variety of contours and may reflect any style of architecture. Notable among recent Presbrey-Leland creations is this elongated monolith of superb grace and simplicity. How tastefully appropriate are the three interlocked wreaths, suggesting a close association of the three families. PL38944 for Frank S. Connnett, New York City.

THE SCREEN

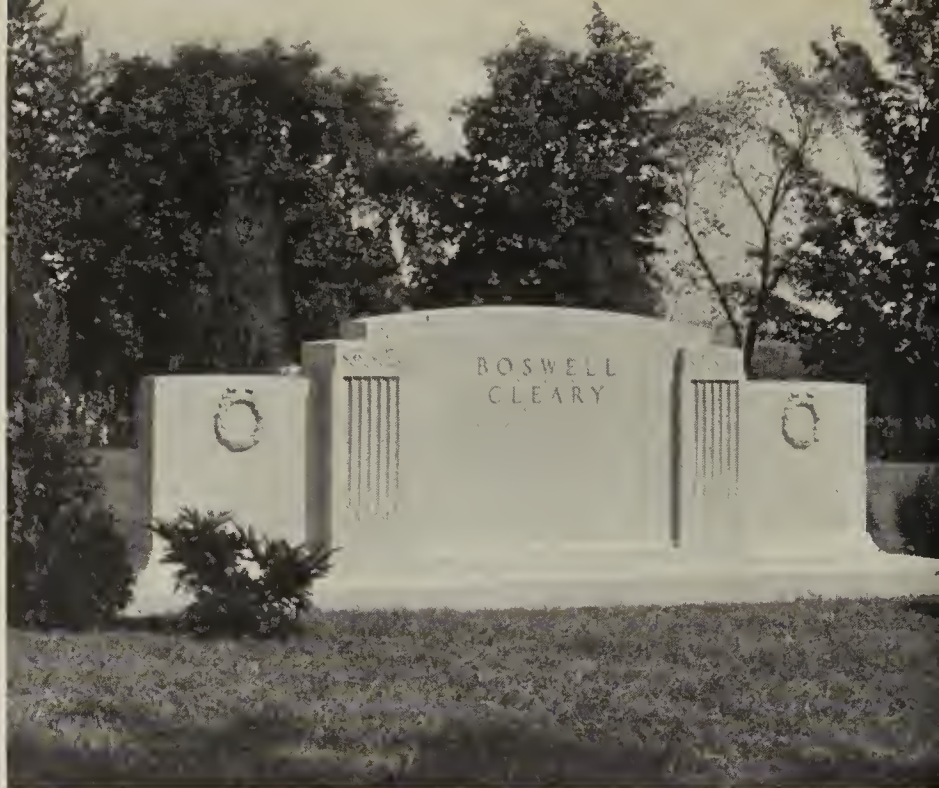

IN general design of mass and detail the memorial screen very closely resembles the exedra save that the seat or bench is omitted. The more imposing examples usually feature wings or appendages flanking a Tablet, canopy or some similar central feature; while the screens of moderate cost are not unlike horizontal Tablets of important scale. Memorials of this type involve much the same requirements that apply to the exedra. They are best used on large, level plots and because they do indeed screen out the background they should be placed at the rear. The elimination of the seat obviously makes the screen somewhat less costly than the exedra and the architectural possibilities of this type have found a wide appeal. Shrubbery is an important element of effect in these and all other memorials of considerable scale.

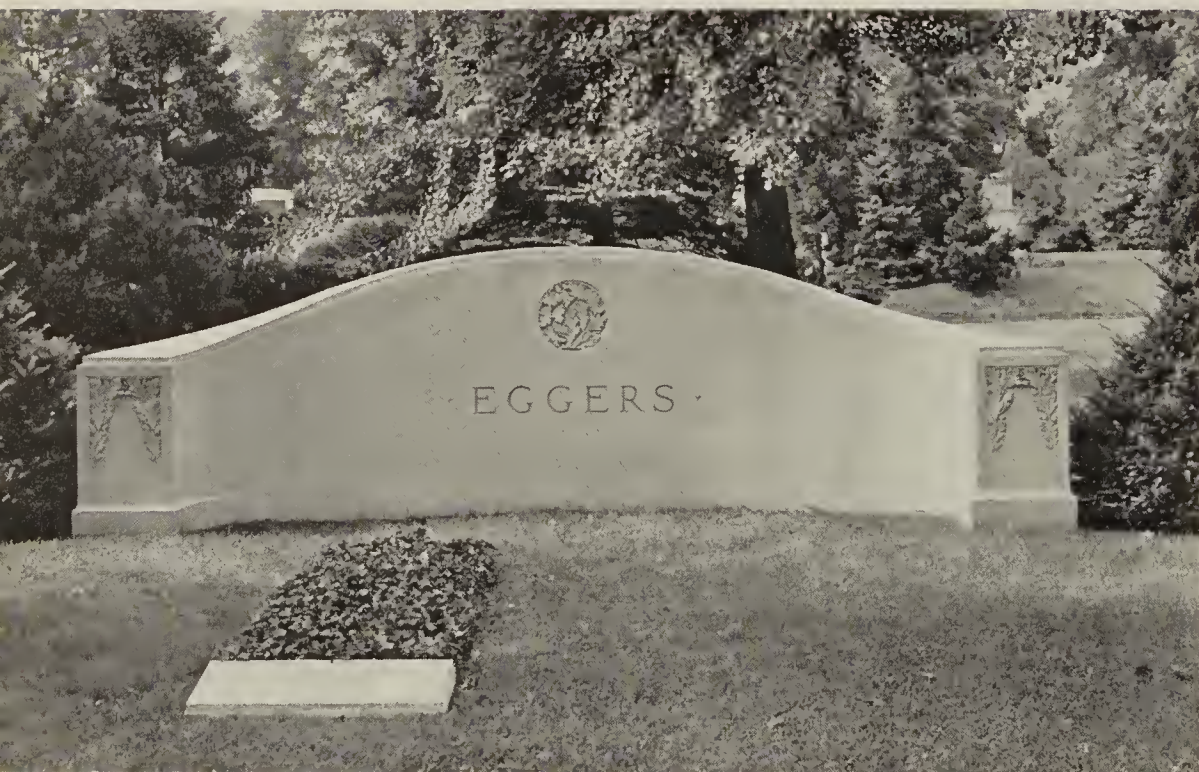

A recent development of the screen type in which vertical lines dominate. The central tablet is adapted from the Colonial headstone, see Page 24. The flanking wings are relatively narrow, sustaining the vertical lines of the tablet. Note the brilliant play of light and shade in the Passion Flower carving. PL18464 for Mrs. Paul von Amsberg in New York City.

When the cemetery plot is of small or moderate area, it is ordinarily advisable to design the memorial with a simple facade of uninterrupted expanse. It is virtually impossible, otherwise, to avoid a cluttered or "busy" effect. Larger plots may invite the use of more involved composition with good grace. In this exquisitely designed memorial, the central mass, flanked by the fluted pilasters is in itself pleasing in proportion, and is in turn nicely integrated with the wings, to complete a most satisfying result. Attention is called to the precision with which the details of this lovely screen, designed by John Duncan Forsyth, architect, have been rendered. PL28026 for William D. Boswell, Albany, N. Y.

THE SCREEN— CONTEMPORARY DESIGN

The monolithic screen of curved plan and undulating silhouette introduced by the studios of Presbrey-Leland, has found widespread appeal in recent years. Other examples are shown on the opposite page. Ever sensitive to the vast part played by the over-all grace of outline in this type of memorial, Presbrey-Leland advises caution against entrusting a project of this nature to those whose knowledge of composition and detail may be inferior. Many conscientious attempts to simulate the originals are patently unsuccessful. A sense of dignity and repose is emanant in a correctly composed screen. PL37896 designed and erected for Mrs. George H. Eggers of Evansville, Ind.

The personalization of memorials is a phase of design about which there is considerable sincere difference of opinion. Obviously both the degree and manner in which lives are reflected are points upon which much of the discussion hinges. Presbrey-Leland adopts the attitude of condoning the practice so long as a dignified restraint can be maintained. Often an extremely subtle or esoteric suggestion is fitting and adequate. Here the outstanding career of the late Gus Edwards in the world of music is epitomized by the carved representations of the boy and girl of "School Days"—one of the composer's best known ballads. The terminal posts or "antae", an integral part of this form of screen, provide ideal surfaces for the symbolic decoration. PL42642 for Mrs. Gus Edwards, Charles Keck, Sculptor.

THE SCREEN— CONTEMPORARY DESIGN

Designers are often asked why grace and good proportion cannot be achieved by a reduction of height as well as an increase of length. The question is a most natural and logical one, but it has an incontestable answer—the almost whimsical, but nevertheless vital, element of scale. In memorial design, the monument of horizontal mass for a small or moderate sized family plot is seldom given a height of less than three feet. Regardless of other dimensions, the scale becomes inadequate to do justice to the best concepts of design. Occasionally, however, a natural acclivity toward the setting invites a further restriction of height. Here the knoll upon which the memorial rests has given this charming monolithic screen a wholly acceptable scale, despite the rarely seen total height of but two and one half feet. The ground plan is subtly curved. PL35331 for the Estate of Ralph P. Hinchman, New York City.

This memorial marks the resting place of the Reverend S. Parkes Cadman, an outstanding clergyman of our time. One of the first "radio pastors," his sermons reached the ears of millions. Broad and modern in all of his ideas and ideals, he is fittingly commemorated by a memorial designed in the Modern architecture. The cruciform swords and the oak leaf decoration eloquently symbolize the militant Faith and strength of the great spiritual leader. PL34166 for Frederick L. Cadman, of Lakeville, Conn.

THE SCREEN—WITH BASE AND MONOLITHIC

A recent development in the memorials of the screen type is the elongated monolith here illustrated. Flanked by planting, such a monument forms an impressive background for the family plot. A single block of granite with no base or cap-stone, a screen of this type conveys a sense of solidity and permanence which is here emphasized by the block-like terminals. The sculptured panels are enriched with the urn and ivy—both symbolizing Memory. Note the exquisite definition of this carving. PL31248 for William P. Conklin, Esq., Hartford, Conn.

It has been observed that the various types into which memorials are classified are not specific or confining. Often a question arises as to just which is the correct entry. Here there might be such a question, for none could criticize the inclusion of this monolith with the horizontal tablets. In general, however, the screen is designed for the larger plots and utilizes the wider expanse to effect the graceful proportions afforded by relatively long, low lines. Unlike the Conklin memorial opposite, which features a crisp outline, and carved decoration, this notable example relies upon the gentle flow of the serpentine top, the slight entasis of the ends, and the softened treatment of the projecting footing. PL31480 for Max Littwitz of New York City.

THE SCREEN—UNEMBELLISHED AND GOTHIC DETAIL

Comment has been made upon the variety of ground plans that lend themselves to the screen of monolithic design. Here the straight line is featured, not only in the front elevation, but in plan as well. There is a crisp, clean-cut, effect in composition shunning curvilinear lines that has strong appeal to many. Embracing a plot of ample proportion, the Sayles memorial of Gothic source is a typical example of Presbrey-Leland designing, and attention to detail. PL 27154 for Mrs. F. C. Sayles, Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y.

101

Situated on a wide plot above the roadway and framed by large trees in the background, this memorial illustrates how effectively the screen fulfills the requirements of such a site, where expanse and important scale are so essential. Coupled pilasters are used on a monumental tablet crowned with a cyma shaped entablature and the flanking walls have a slight elliptical curve. Compare this memorial with the "Motherhood" monument on page 120 in which the pilasters rest upon the dado or upper base. The detail is Renaissance. PL23266 for Mrs. Leo A. Korper, Hartford, Connecticut.

SCREENS FOR THE LARGER PLOTS

Spanning a large family plot, on a slightly promontory, this stately memorial in the Modern architecture has a total length of thirty-eight feet; and the lofty tablet in the center measures eighteen feet and six inches above grade. Magnificently proportioned, this tablet is enriched with bas-reliefs, by the late Augustus Lukeman, depicting the activities and ideals of the commemorated. Monumental in scale and dignity, this memorial admirably illustrates the architectural beauty and significant decoration which are features of Presbrey-Leland memorials. PL30456 for the Estate of David J. Post, West Hartford, Conn.

The screen, like the exedra, may reflect the spirit of ancient and modern garden-like cemeteries. This example, for instance, introduces the balustrade—a traditional motive for the parapet of terraced gardens. In memorials of the screen type, the balustrade serves to attain the desired expanse without burdensome weight of stone. The central detail or feature of the screen illustrated above is a pedestal reminiscent of the ancient altar, often used in Roman exedrae, and notably the triclinium. TD5861 for Mrs. David Theodore Davis, New York City.

SCREENS—BALUSTRADE AND COLUMNATED TYPE

A notable example of the monumental screen and one which clearly illustrates the similarity of this type and the exedra (see Pages 90-95). Indeed, the architectural term "screen" has been arbitrarily adopted in memorial art to designate monuments of exedra-like form in which the seat is omitted; for there is no other distinction if we except the examples which resemble the large horizontal tablet. In this memorial screen, a shrine-like columnated canopy is flanked by low curving walls—extensions of the podium on which the columns rest. An exceptional example of harmony between monument and setting. Walker & Gillette, Architects. PL20666 for Mrs. Franklin P. Frazier, New York City.

The family plot of the distinguished Virginian and statesman, the Honorable Carter Glass, is marked by this impressively simple obelisk of the truncate type with a low apex or pyramidion—a type favored in Colonial Times. Classifications into which memorials fall, are not rigidly fixed or inelastic. Here is a case in point. Were it not for the apex, the mass and proportion of this shaft might well invite classification with pedestal monuments. However, obelisks, a traditional commemorative form for at least 6000 years (see page 105) have been conceived in widely varying proportions. Here, the solid block-like mass seems most appropriate as an association with the unswerving loyalty and integrity of Mr. Glass, statesman and gentleman. PL34363 for the Honorable Carter Glass, of Lynchburg, Va.

THE OBELISK

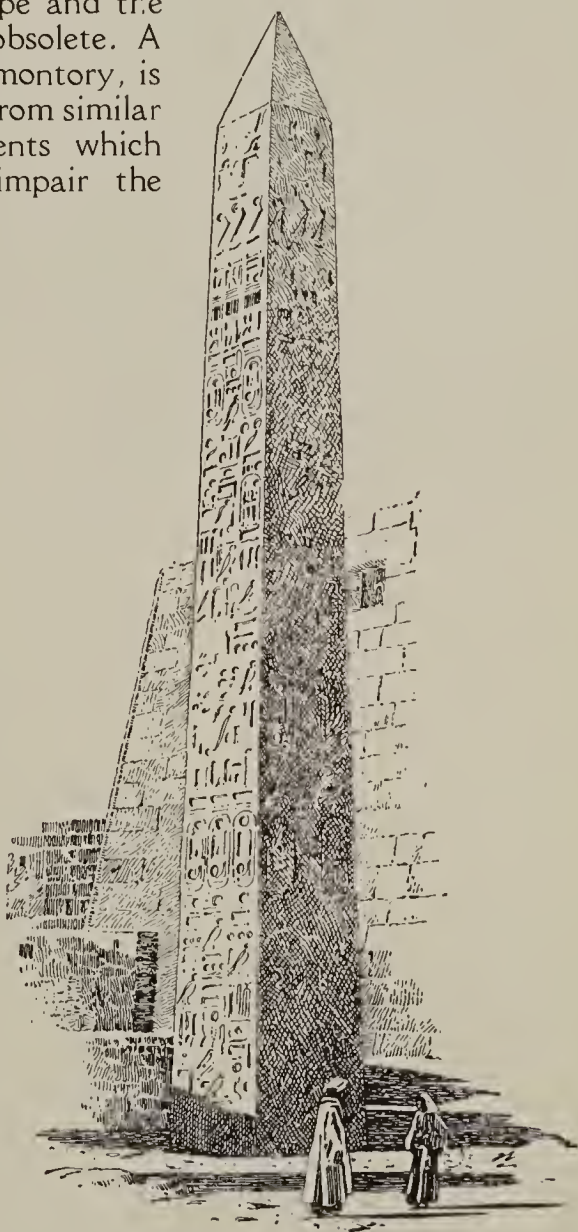

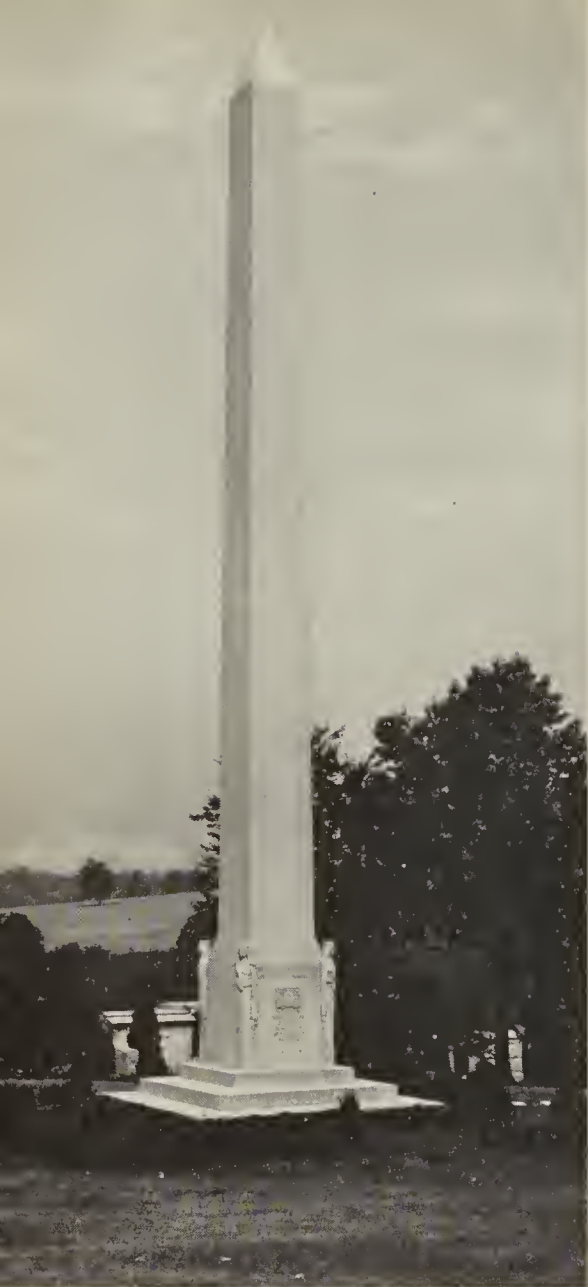

DATING back to the 4th Dynasty—some four thousand years before Christ—the Egyptian obelisk has compelled the admiration of man throughout all subsequent ages. Indeed, such is the sublimity of these towering monoliths that with prodigious labor most of them have been transported to other countries. Of some twelve which were moved to Rome, the one standing in St. John Lateran is the largest known monolithic shaft, measuring one hundred and five feet six inches in height and weighing one million twenty thousand pounds. It was the Egyptian regard for scale, balance and proportion which transformed these long uninteresting blocks of stone into noble spires by observing an ingenious relationship between diameter, shaft and the angle of the pyramidion or apex—the height being eight to eleven times the width of base. Needless to observe, these proportions cannot be bettered and modern adaptations by Presbrey-Leland adhere closely to prototype. Moreover, scale is an important element of effect in monuments of this type and the diminutive obelisk has properly become obsolete. A large plot, preferably situated on some promontory, is desirable and the obelisk should be isolated from similar monuments which might impair the scale.

The parents of Benjamin Franklin rest beneath this pyramidal shaft in the Old Granary burial ground, Boston. When obelisks are reduced in height, they should be thus given a compensating massiveness with a blunt pyramidion or apex.

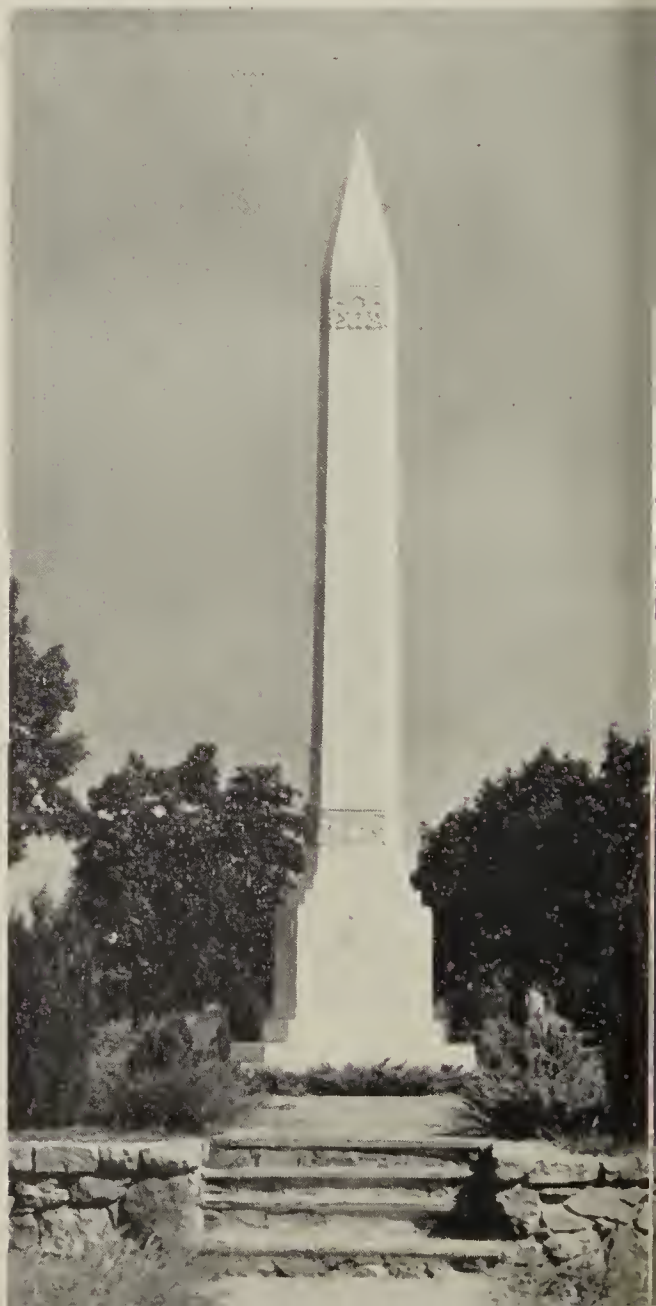

Obelisk at Luxor, dating from Rameses II, 19th Dynasty. Symbolizing re-creation, the obelisks were reared in pairs before the temple. The so-called Cleopatra's Needle in New York and its companion on Thames Embankment were erected by Thothmes III, circa 1591–65 B.C., at the Temple of the Sun in sacred Heliopolis. They were removed to Alexandria by Cleopatra—hence the title "Cleopatra's Needles." The New York obelisk is sixty-nine feet six inches high, the weight approximately five hundred thousand pounds.

One of the outstanding works of Presbrey-Leland, this imposing obelisk rises to a total height of 52'-6" above grade, on a large area set aside by the Actor's Fund of America at Kensico Cemetery in Westchester. The concave pedestal so popular in the past has been abandoned in favor of the more authentic and architecturally correct type of foursquare pedestal. This expedient also facilitated the accommodation of the four alto-relief figures symbolizing Tragedy, Comedy, Music, and Authorship, at the corners. Superb in proportion and scale, this magnificent commemorative tribute is dedicated by the Actor's Fund to the "memory of their fellows of the theatre". A vital step in the procedure of the staff of design was the preparation of a precise model in scale, from which the mass and composition was studied from every conceivable angle. PL37222 for the Actor's Fund of America, Inc.

THE OBELISK— MODERN ADAPTATIONS

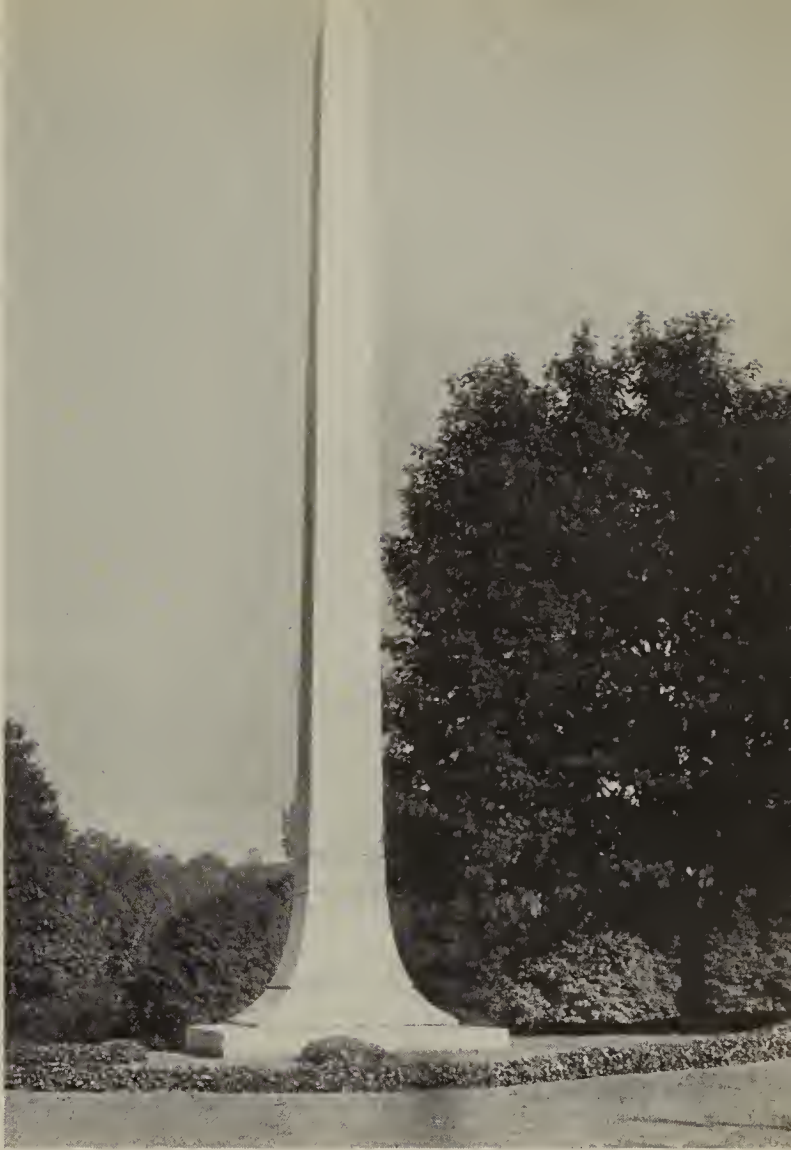

As has often been implied, adherence to an authentic prototype can become a source of monotony. Not to disparage the wonders of the ancient world which produced countless impeccable works of art, present-day masters must guard against relying too slavishly upon historic precedent. Definitely it is neither plagiarism nor sacrilege to use such a prototype for inspiration, altering detail or proportion to achieve a refreshing departure from the traditional norm. Here the rich bands of carved ornament, the stepped transition from die to shaft, and the unusually acute pyramidion are desirable notes of distinction. PL26241 for the Estate of Robert F. Pfifer, in Concord, N.E.

The concave pedestal was never used with the obelisk of antiquity. The sheer ponderous scale of the Egyptian prototypes accounted for their sublime majesty, which attribute none will deprecate. For grace of line, however, there can be little question that the flowing sweep of the curved die and surbase affords an esthetic advantage few can fail to appreciate. Another wholly reasonable departure from tradition, the sense of structural solidity suggested by this expedient is an added feature. PC2353 for the Estate of Dr. Henry E. Owen, New York City.

THE OBELISK—
CONCAVE AND
CLASSIC PEDESTAL

Notable among American adaptations of the obelisk is this memorial on the R. J. Reynolds estate at Winston-Salem, North Carolina. The elevated terrace with balustrade and benches harmonizes with the formal garden and the obelisk is supported by a classic pedestal such as the Romans used. PL20060 for the Estate of Katharine S. Johnston, Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

The column is at once the triumph and the glory of Classic architecture and for sheer architectural beauty the columnar memorial has remained unsurpassed throughout the ages. Outstanding among columnated monuments of imposing scale and beauty is the bi-columnar form shown in this illustration. Unlike the single memorial pillar, the two columns may be crowned with the complete entablature thus literally reproducing the Order from stylobate to cornice. Rarely has memorial art in America surpassed this impressive memorial designed and erected for Huntington Beard Crouse, Esq., of Syracuse, New York. PL26290.

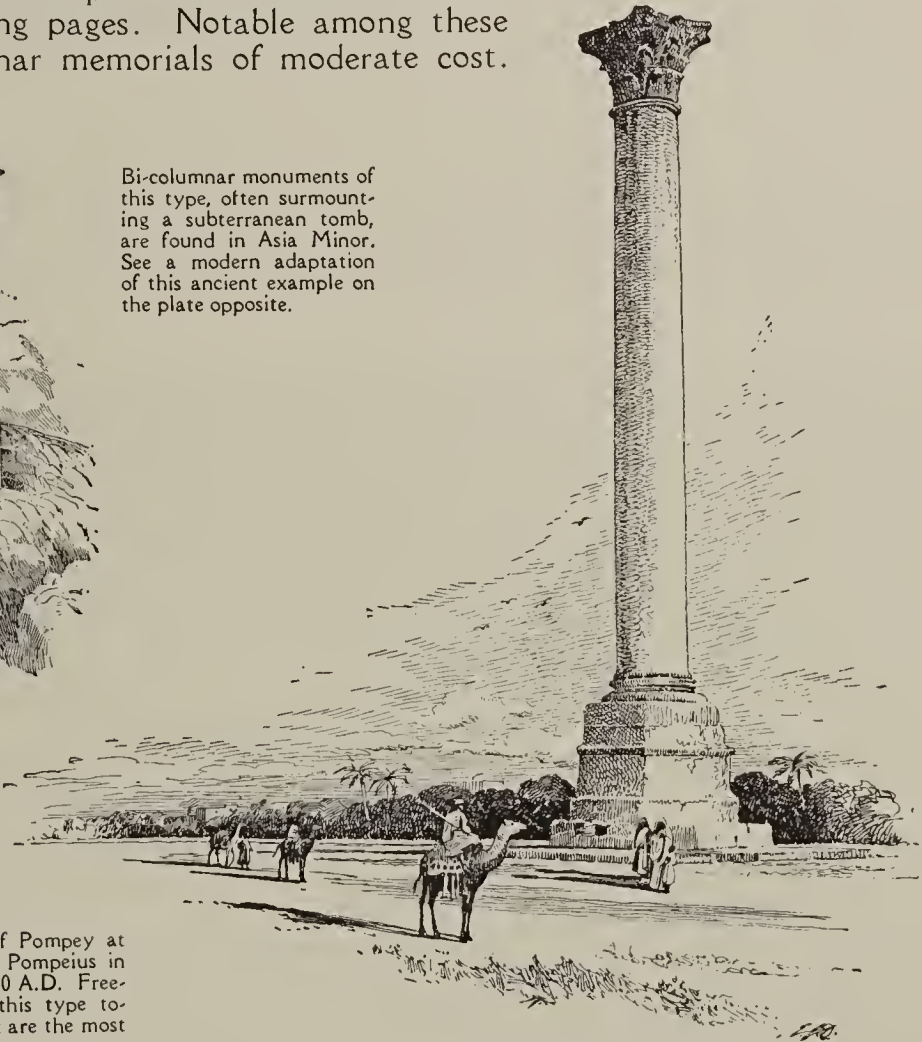

THE COLUMNAR MONUMENT

WHEN Solomon reared two memorial pillars thirty cubits high before the great Temple at Jerusalem, naming them Jachin and Boaz, he was observing a custom old even in that day; for recent excavations in Babylonia together with relics of Phoenicia reveal the antiquity of commemorative columns throughout the ancient East. During the archaic Greek period, memorial columns twelve to twenty feet in height were used to support statues of heroes and divinities—notably by the Ionians—and a number of these pillars, ex-voto, once stood upon the Acropolis. But it was during the Roman ascendancy that memorial columns were reared in vast numbers throughout the Empire. The Forum was crowded with Pillars of Victory and it was in Rome that the gigantic columna cochlis, so-called because of the spiral staircase within, was developed; notably the Column of Trajan, by the architect Apollodorus of Damascus, with its twenty-five hundred figures carved in spiral form on a shaft one hundred and twenty-eight feet high. In America, the free-standing column and monuments of the canopy type were favoured above all other columnated memorials during the latter part of the 19th Century, but the current revival of creative design has developed many variations, typical examples of which are illustrated on the following pages. Notable among these are the columnar memorials of moderate cost.

Bi-columnar monuments of this type, often surmounting a subterranean tomb, are found in Asia Minor. See a modern adaptation of this ancient example on the plate opposite.

The so-called Pillar of Pompey at Alexandria, reared by Pompeius in honor of Diocletian, 400 A.D. Free-standing columns of this type together with the obelisk are the most imposing of all monuments.

A famed example of the circular colonnade with domed roof is the Temple of Love in the Gardens at Versailles. In this variant of the circular shrine architectural individuality is achieved by featuring the attenuated Renaissance columns and a relatively simple entablature enriched with conventionalized morning-glory and shields. PL26176 designed and erected for William J. Daniel, Esq., of New York City.

TEMPLE OF LOVE AND
SOURCE

A striking example of Presbrey-Leland designing, the Salmon columnar memorial immediately captures the interest of those many who look upon the ancient Greeks as the architectural masters of all time. The monument is magnificently composed. Combining the majestic Greek Doric column with the square piers at the flanks, the resulting harmony of masses and detail is manifestly superb. A stern test of good design is the success or failure with which a composition of considerable surface decoration achieves a sense of quiet and repose, or appears unordered or "busy". Note how perfectly the many authentic elements are related, and what order and rhythm are expressed! PL35514 for the Estate of Jesse R. Salmon in Mount Olive, N. J.

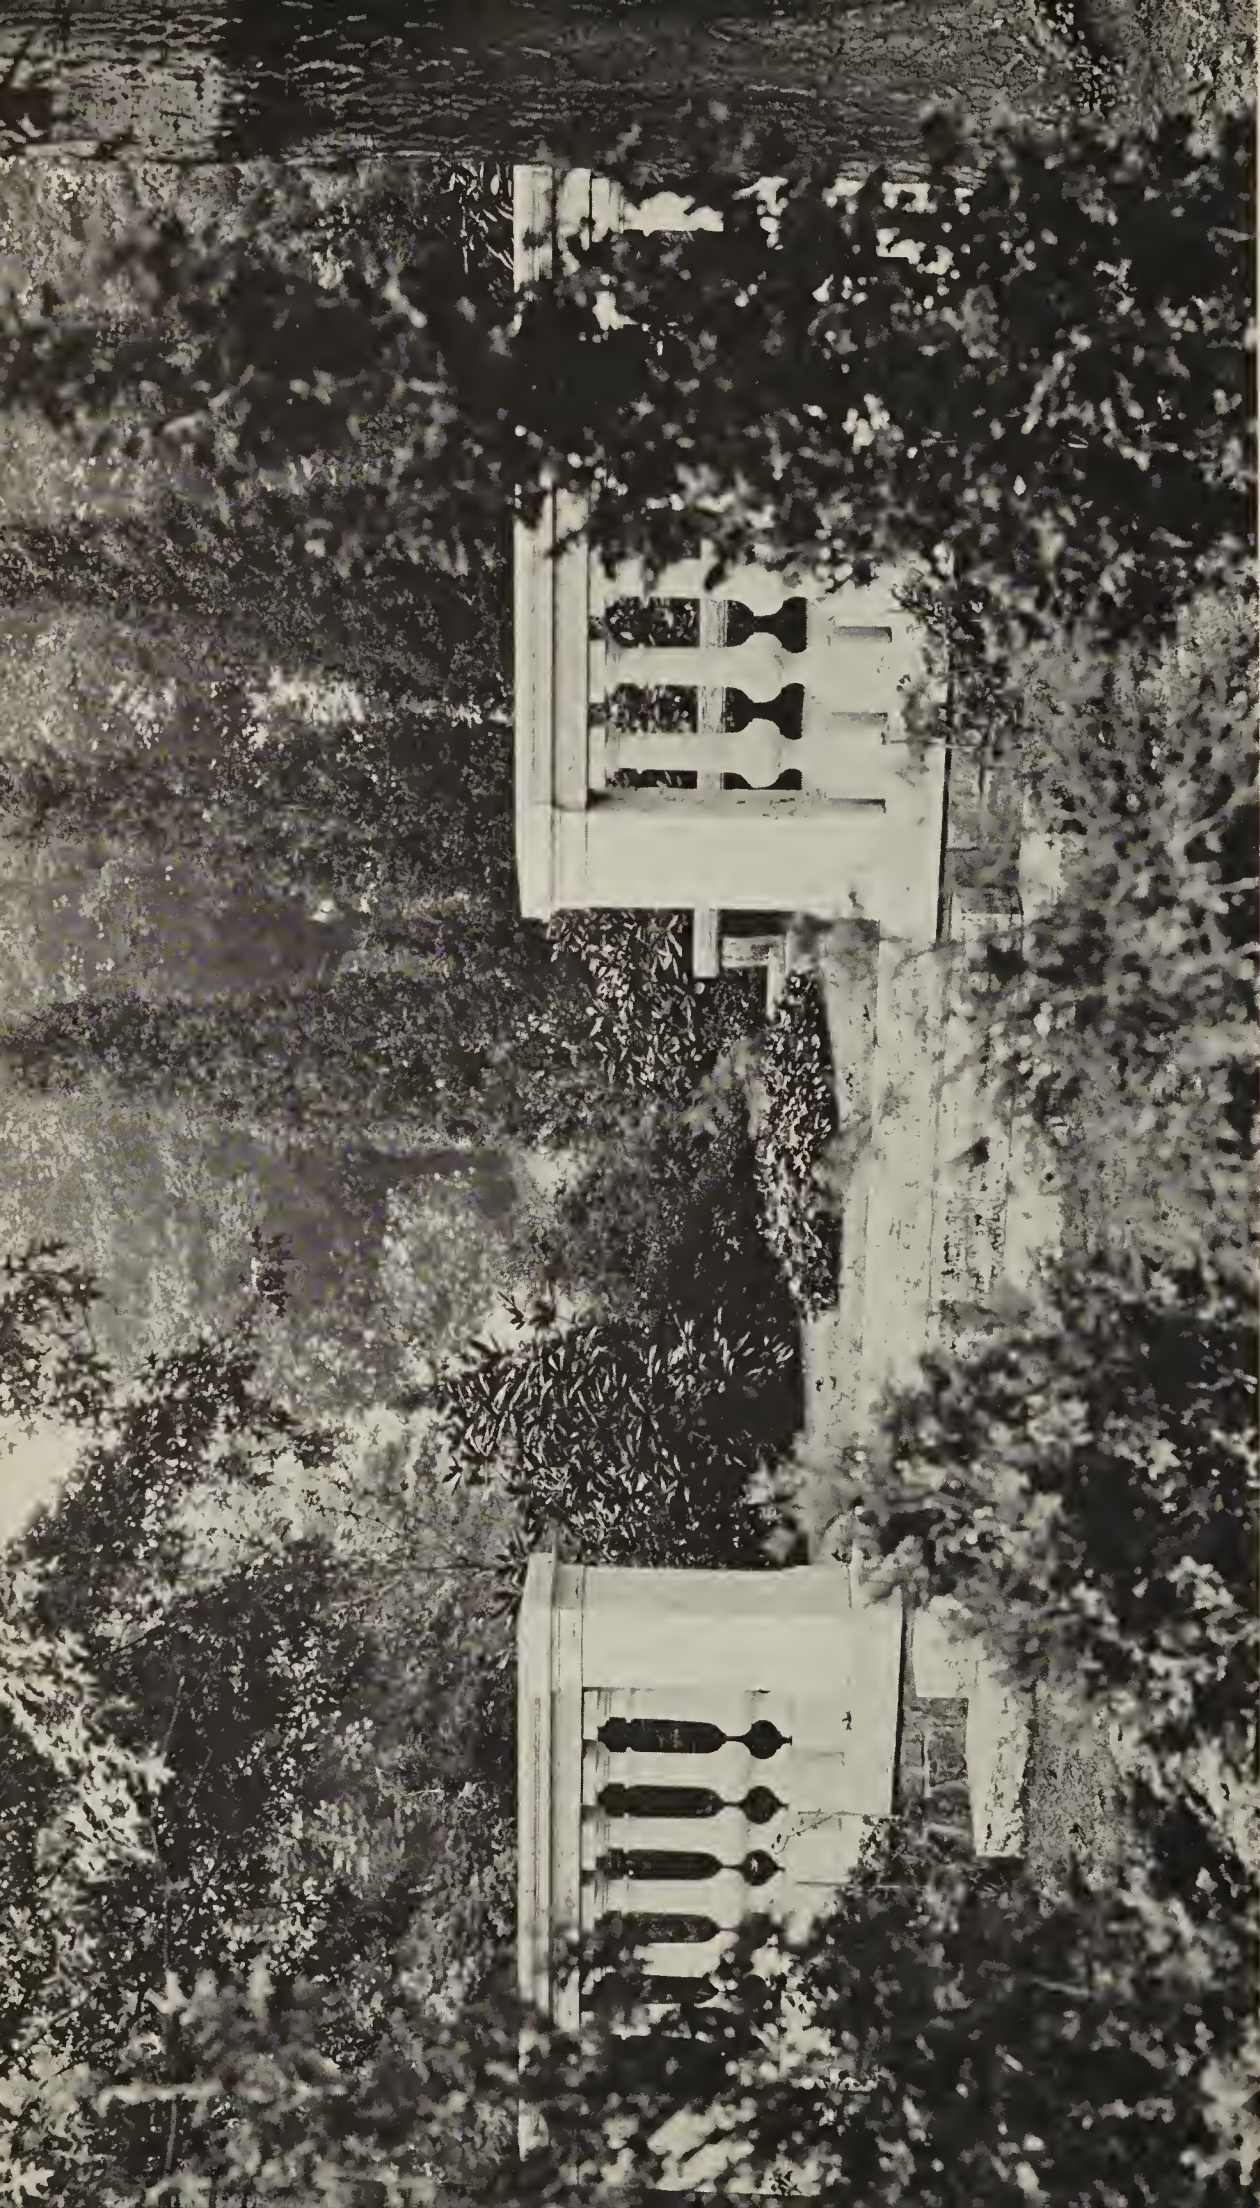

Of all the elements of effect in architecture, none quite rivals the column in beauty of line and detail. The pillars of victory and the memorial columns of ancient Rome bespeak the antiquity of the column as a monument. On a site such as this, requiring important scale, what better theme for the memorial than such a lofty column, adapted from the Tower of the Winds and crowned with the votive tripod? PL21845 for the Estate of Albert F. Rockwell, Bristol, Conn.

FREE-STANDING COLUMN AND COLONNADE

Illustrated with the other columnar monuments, which obviously is an accurate classification, this magnificent memorial is also a form of underground tomb. Although the mausoleum is usually chosen in order to eliminate the ordeal of earth interment, a monument of this type provides the desired security within the foundation and entirely away from the earth. Furthermore, the possibilities in mausoleum design are hampered in some degree, by the practical or functional requirements. When the tomb is wholly underground, the esthetic is given free rein, and the designer afforded full scope for his composition; as witness this exquisite development of the authentic Corinthian colonnade ensemble. PL26456 for H. W. Chapin, Esq., Syracuse, N. Y.

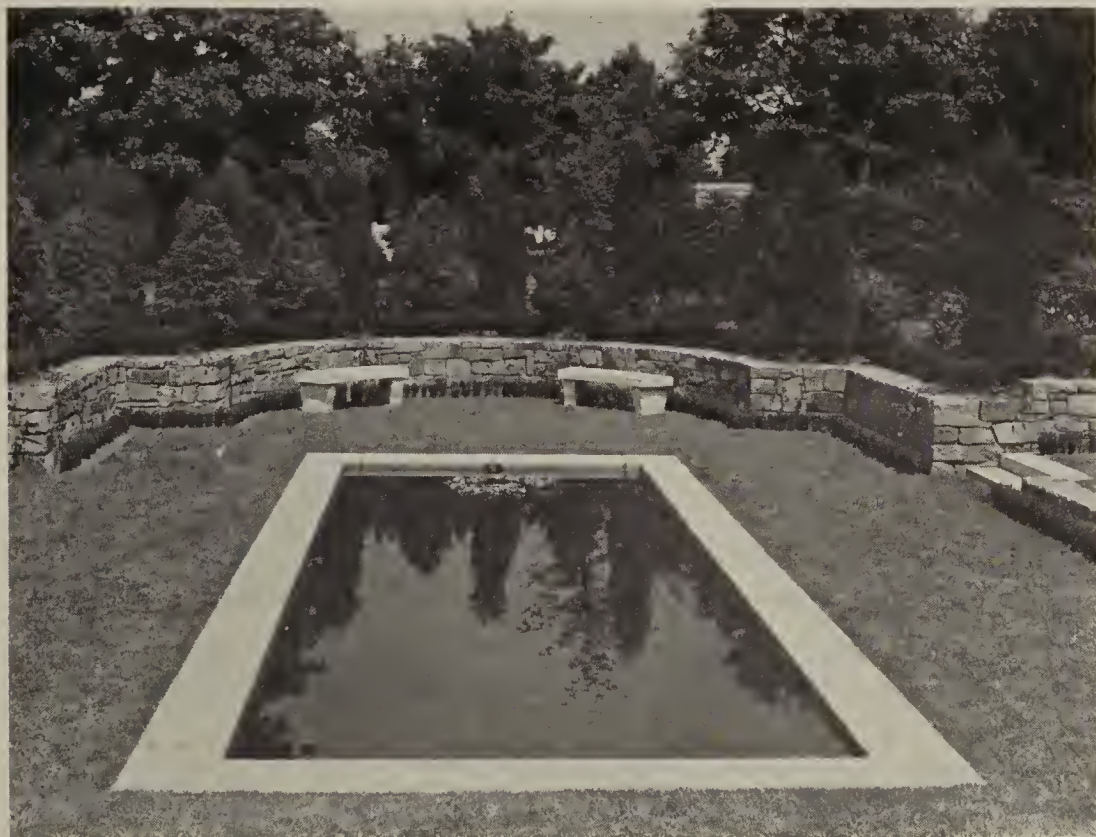

Serenely beautiful and non-funereal is this garden-like treatment of the family plot. The balustrade, surmounting a low retaining wall, extends across the front of the plot, interrupted by the steps which form the approach. An elongated garden bench, framed by picturesque planting, is positioned near the interments. The formal garden atmosphere here attained bespeaks the resourcefulness, expert training and broad experience with which Presbrey-Leland designers approach the beautification of a family plot. PL30370 for Mrs. Ernest Hopkinson of New York City.

THE GARDEN-TYPE MONUMENT

LANDSCAPE architects and professional horticulturists, often retained as superintendents, are transforming the American cemetery. Throughout the country there is an organized movement, sponsored by the Association of American Cemetery Superintendents, to make God's Acre a tranquil garden spot of natural beauty—an inspiration to the living. In a sense, this is a revival of the ancient garden and villa cemetery of antiquity which the early Christians adapted when they planted the burial place with trees and flowers, calling the cemetery Hortus (garden). Actuated by the ideals of this movement and inspired by the lovely landscape setting of so many modern cemetery plots, Presbrey-Leland has given especial study to memorials which in design are adapted from such garden accessories as the sun dial, pergola, garden bench, balustrade and bird-bath. A departure from the conventional and funereal monument, these memorials possess a charm, fitness and significance obvious to all who love Nature as "God's art." However modest the appropriation, or the size of the plot, some theme borrowed from the formal garden may be used as a memorial, particularly where a few shrubs can be featured.

A prevailing reluctance to visit the cemetery cannot be denied. In great measure, of course, this reluctance must be attributed to the nature of the function the cemetery fulfills. But in great part also, it is due to the lamentable lack of art and refinement in memorial design. What a tremendous step toward the alleviation of the somber, funeral atmosphere so naturally deplored, when a garden effect can be achieved without sacrifice of dignity or respect! Observe the lovely combination of the rustic, random-ashlar wall, circumscribing the plot with the finished granite benches and trim. The tile-floored lagoon is designed to maintain a constant and shallow water line, making a haven for bird-life. PL32529 for Frank V. Storrs, Esq., New York City.

Reference is made (page 93) to the free-standing bench as an appropriate memorial. Often employed as an accessory to, or a contiguous part of, a larger monument, the bench may also serve as a feature in a plot of moderate dimensions. Caution should be expressed, however, against attempting this form in a plot of too restricted an area, for, while simple and unimposing, it nevertheless appears a little pointless if there is insufficient space for planting. Observe the tranquil and untrammelled note reflected by this bench of nice detail in its setting of shrubbery. PL 30954 for Samuel Strauss, of New York City.

THE GARDEN BENCH AND SUNDIAL

A combination of garden motifs can often be used to excellent advantage, particularly where the plot is of large area and a dial or a bench can be informally positioned as a complementary accessory. Here a plot of smaller dimensions invited a feature of modest scale. The justifiable desire for both the sundial and the bench, posed a problem in achieving a tolerable composition. The result is gratifying. An urn-like pedestal for the dial narrows towards the foot, affording the freedom required for the profile of the ends of the benches. A granite of warm cast is used as an appropriate medium for this type of memorial. PL41400 for Mrs. Bertha Gutentag of Scarsdale, N. Y.

The setting for the Cole memorial cannot be fully appreciated in the illustration. To the rear is a vine-covered retaining wall of rough sandstone, rising to a height of some seven feet. The authorities of one of New Jersey's fine cemeteries took advantage of a steep natural incline, to cut away clearings along the hillside, backed by the beautifully rustic walls. Here Presbrey-Leland seized upon the spirit already introduced, by creating an exedra of graceful contour, out of stratified natural stone and finished granite trim—each in excellent harmony with the other, and both with the wall beyond. Interments are clearly but unobtrusively marked with a small recumbent plaque. PL40656 for E. S. Cole, Montclair, N. J.

THE RUSTIC EXEDRAE AND BIRDBATH

Similar to the memorial above, in spirit, the ensemble created for this plot of larger area fulfills a slightly different purpose. In effect, the screen of the memorial itself comprises its own enclosure, embracing an area appropriate for the benches and birdbath. "Seam-face" granite, much of it using the beauty of the natural quarry seams, often yellow or gold, affords a superb combination of harmonious color values, while the neutral buff of the limestone trim completes the symphony in stone. A winding entrance path is formed of stepping-stones of irregular outline. PL29208 for the Estate of G. W. Morgan, in Tarrytown, N. Y.

115

Just as a garden can be more or less formal in effect, so can the garden-type memorial assume a casual, reserved role in a plot, or on the other hand it can take on more monumental attributes. In the latter instance especially it is important to see that the problem is entrusted to qualified designers. Here a pedestal of square plan has been nicely detailed in the classic tradition, and in full harmony with the exquisitely carved Grecian urn. The keynote is one of majesty and stateliness, while the lovely background helps to focus the attention upon the beauty of the urn, and accents the marked individuality of design. PC7912 for J. R. Miglietta of New York City.

THE VASE AND WELLHEAD

The wellheads or well-curbs of medieval piazzas and churches are often reproduced in modern gardens where they may also be used as urns or vases. In some instances Presbrey-Leland has created memorials of this type, with the drum cored out to receive planting during the summer, and a bronze disc to cover the basin during the winter months. Here, however, the wellhead form was adopted as a purely decorative feature. There is no provision for planting. A simplification of the richly carved acanthus fronds, usually found in Venetian prototypes, has been introduced, as an acceptable expedient in the modern variant. PL31627 for Wm. A. Anderson, Esq. New York City.

Exquisite in Renaissance detail and beautifully proportioned, this dial stone admirably illustrates the possibilities and significance of the sundial as a memorial. PL34985 for the Estate of Harold S. Maddock, Harbourton, New Jersey.

THE SUNDIAL AND PERGOLA

This example of the pergola was the first of its type to be erected and it has deservedly earned a wide appeal. The semi-circular colonnade supporting a trellis-like lintel forms a recess in the center of which stands a monumental urn banked with trailing vines—a picturesque, withal dignified departure from the funereal monument. In later variations, the sundial and birdbath have been used in place of the vase. L8143 for Bartlett Arkell, Esq., Canajoharie, New York.

Surely ranked among the foremost women sculptors of the world, the talented Harriet Frishmuth has created many of the truly great inspirational works of our time. Here the superb allegorical figure titled "Aspiration" has been carved from the living stone by master-craftsmen who have followed the model minutely. The delicate uplifted arm, extending free and unsupported, has been regarded as one of the most difficult and remarkable examples of stone carving. The huge die is monolithic, including the sculpture. One of the fine examples of commemorative art, this monument was designed by the Studios of Presbrey-Leland and produced in collaboration with Harriet Frishmuth, for Mrs. H. Berwind of Philadelphia. PL30039.

THE SCULPTURED MONUMENT

T is sculpture, the finest and noblest of the arts, that has made Pere Lachaise, Campo Santo and other European cemeteries eternal shrines of inspiration for all lovers of beauty the world over.

While commemorative sculpture has been used infrequently in the American cemetery—if we except commercial statuary—nevertheless there is evidence of a great renaissance of sculpture in this country and eminent American sculptors are turning their attention to the traditional field of commemorative art. In collaboration with foremost artists of our time Presbrey-Leland has designed many sculptured memorials, a very few examples of which are here illustrated. Needless to observe, memorials of this type involve a substantial appropriation, albeit now and then an existing model can be reproduced.

There is a priceless satisfaction in leaving to posterity a work of art that will be a permanent source of inspiration. Here for example Harriet Frishmuth has immortalized the faith, hope, purity and beauty of girlhood in a memorial statue entitled "Onward." The grace, rhythm, motion and charm of this poem in bronze will remain a living message of appealing beauty and inspiration, throughout the ages. PL26175 designed and erected for Colby Dill, Esq., of Woodbridge, N. J.

THE SCULPTURED
MONUMENT—
HIGH RELIEF

Sculpture, unlike the mystic significance of symbolism, carries its message to all. Who, for example, can fail to interpret the significance of this Guardian Angel, standing before the Cross and the Book of Life which is inscribed with the words: "Now abideth Faith, Hope, Love, but the greatest of these is Love." The architectural treatment of the figure typifies the work of Charles Keck, master of the technique of modelling for sculpture in granite, the most difficult of all mediums. PL22450 for Mrs. Elizabeth M. Borges of Brooklyn, N. Y.

No theme in art or letters transcends the beauty and glory of Motherhood and because it evokes the most intensive sentiment it has often been sentimentalized at the expense of dignity and restraint. The Motherhood group of this Presbrey-Leland memorial has the restraint and architectural beauty of Greek sculpture the while retaining the inherent human appeal of the theme. Note how the bas-relief composes with the tablet,—a diagonal arrangement, the work of O. Maldarelli. PL22047 for Bertrand L. Taylor, New York City.

THE SCULPTURED MONUMENT OF RELIGIOUS SIGNIFICANCE

First to acknowledge that much of the sculpture found in American cemeteries would have been better undone, conversely Presbrey-Leland heartily favors adopting significant and well executed sculpture as a fine expression of commemorative sentiment, and a boon to American art. Here the exquisitely carved representation of the Blessed Virgin, fittingly enshrined in the niche of Gothic detail, can hardly fail to stir one's most reverent emotions. The tranquil seclusion of the setting—an idyllic retreat of nature—in perfect harmony with the message of the memorial, tends to impose an enforced hush upon the devout spectator. PL40600 designed and erected for Matthew J. Carney, in Gate of Heaven Cemetery, Westchester, N. Y.

Modelled by the late Philip Martiny, a favourite pupil of Augustus Saint Gaudens, this statue of the Nazarene presents Him in the attitude of supplication: "Come unto Me!" There is, too, a significance in the classic temple form of the monumental screen—a suggestion of Christianity's triumph over paganism. PC7093 for the Estate of Gullabi Gulbenkian in New York City.

Her hands outstretched in the attitude of consecration, this bronze statue of "Benediction" attains that note of solemnity and tranquillity so appropriate in the cemetery. Superbly modelled by Stina Gustafson Lascari and Julius Loester, in collaboration, it is one of many notable models in the Presbrey-Leland collection. PL29339 designed and erected for Charles R. Stearns, of Williamsport, Pa.

SCULPTURE CAST IN BRONZE

Reference is made on page 119 to the availability of models, in the galleries of Presbrey-Leland for reproduction in stone or bronze. Needless to observe, this practice must not be repeated too frequently. Eminent artists are generally receptive to the use of their models for a casting or two beyond the original. However, a certain respect is due the fact that the talent has been exercised for a specific purpose, and often for a highly specialized set of circumstances. It is considerate to suggest the procedure only when the two examples are to be erected in different areas, as witness the Stearns memorial above in Williamsport and this stunning counterpart in Valhalla, New York. PC7150 for Felix Arnold, Esq. of New York City.

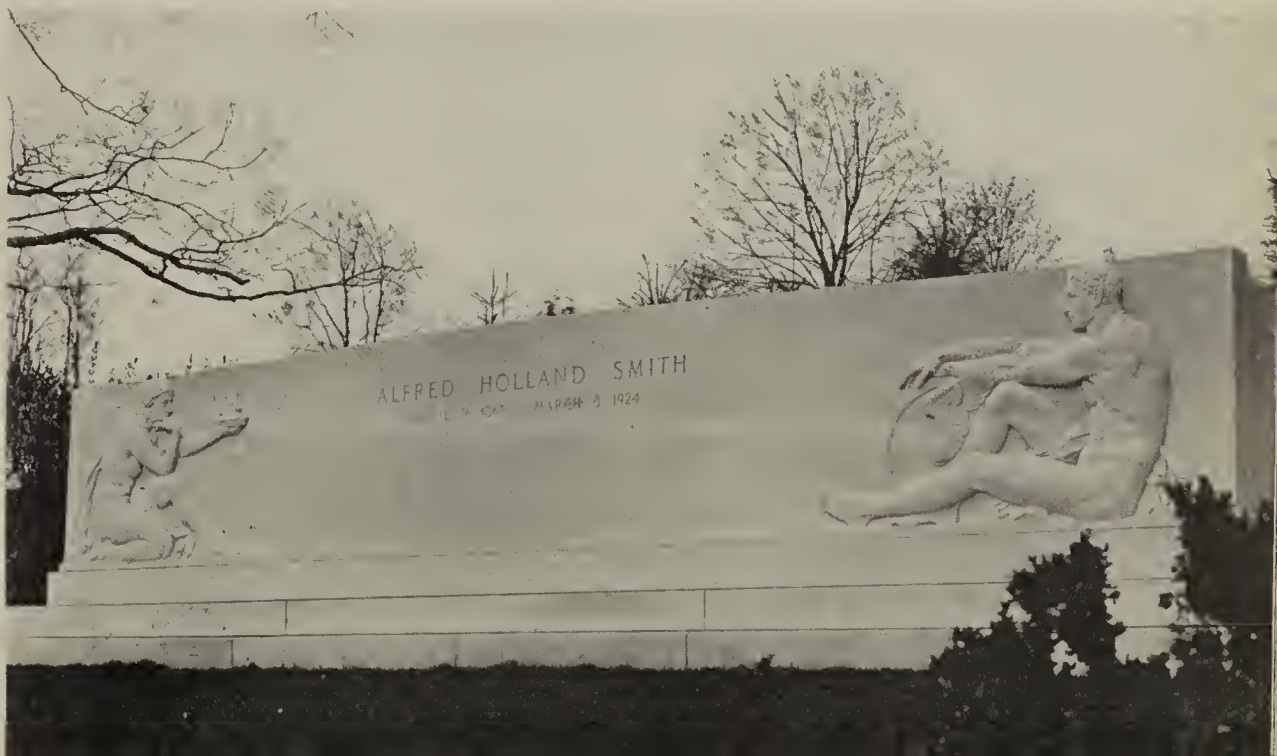

Contrary to popular notion, the introduction of sculpture does not necessitate a large or pretentious monument. Small bas-reliefs, symbolizing Love and Memory, lend significant beauty to the monumental simplicity of this superbly proportioned monolith. Note the exquisite carving of the figures which are but thirty-three inches in height, done in granite! PL29889 for Herbert T. Drake, Esq., of Brockton, Mass.

CONTEMPORARY DESIGN WITH BAS-RELIEF

The tomb of Alfred Holland Smith, late president of the New York Central Railroad, is an example of creative design in architecture and significant form in sculpture. A screen of monumental proportions spans the plot and two bas-reliefs carved on the monolithic facade. Crypts or loculi are located at each end of the tomb. Inspiration and achievement, subjects for the bas relief panels, are the work of Charles Keck. PL21021 for Mrs. Alfred Holland Smith, New York City.

GARDEN
TIONAL
SCULPTUR

It is perhaps a natural assumption that sculpture for the cemetery will be designed in a solemn vein. Allegory or religious concepts are instinctively associated with the serious side of life. On this page are shown two examples where a spirit of uplift is reflected in the bloom of youth. How better could the garden effect be complemented than with this entrancing bronze statuette wherein the intimate relationships of nature are suggested in the alighting of the bird upon the outstretched finger of the little girl! PL39925 for Mrs. Helen J. Knickerbocker of Elkhart, Indiana. Bessie Potter Vonnoh, Sculptor.

Above, the emotional reaction experienced by the spectator is inevitably one of almost pure sweetness and light. Presbrey-Leland considers this an altogether appropriate sentiment for those who feel that a loss should be met with firm resolution and the determination to continue in the search for the sunny side of life. Here, the atmosphere is related, but embraces a commemorative note as well. The lovely bronze by Harriet Frishmuth is titled "Roses of Yesterday", reflecting the concept of solemn reminiscence, but doing so in a most inspiringly beautiful manner. Observe that a setting of planting is essential to the best results, with memorials of this type. PL35904 for Mrs. Edward Wise, of Stamford, Conn.

BAS-RELIEF
ADAPTED
SCREEN

Holding the radiant lamp in his right hand while the left lifts away the veil of darkness, the figure in this bas-relief by Maldarelli commemorates the life work of Dr. Edgar Steiner Thomson, eminent ophthalmologist, who devoted his life to restoring sight to the blind. PL28088 designed and erected for Mrs. Edgar S. Thomson, of New York City.

Impressive in scale, inspiring in significance and unique in design, this memorial has been described as an outstanding example of commemorative art in America. A lofty Cross flanked by wide-spreading screens, the monument spans two large family plots. Definitely inspired by the Modern architecture, the memorial exemplifies an ideal fusion of Symbolism, Sculpture and the epitaphical quotation. The superbly modelled bas-reliefs terminating the screens, represent Faith and Adoration. Symbols of the Four Evangelists together with the Sacred Monogram of Christ enrich the crossing. This impressive memorial typifies the creative work of Presbrey-Leland designers. PL33777 for the Estate of Frank G. Shattuck, New York City.

PART IV
THE CIVIC AND MILITARY
MEMORIAL

PUBLIC MEMORIALS
MEMORIAL WINDOWS
COMMEMORATIVE TABLETS
CEMETERY STRUCTURES

The war memorial at Montclair, New Jersey, is adapted from the ancient pillar of victory. The heroic statue of Victory surmounting the shaft and the group of soldiers in action at the base are the work of Charles Keck. The monument bespeaks a studied co-ordination of architecture, sculpture and landscape. The natural lake appearing in the foreground, actually surrounds a central island upon which the monument stands—almost as if Fate had consecrated it for the particular purpose. An esthetic asset to the community, the memorial was made possible through the voluntary offerings of its citizens. PL21397.

THE CIVIC AND MILITARY MEMORIAL

THE artistic merit of our public monuments today, contrasted with the mediocrities of the post-Civil War period, is due largely to the fact that as a nation we have come to recognize the importance of entrusting such projects to sculptors and architects of talent and professional training. On Page xix of this book will be found a list of celebrated artists who have entrusted the interpretation of their plans and models for public and private memorials to Presbrey-Leland. A few of these monuments are here illustrated, together with examples designed by architects on the staff of Presbrey-Leland, in collaboration with sculptors of national reputation.

THE TOMB OF PRESIDENT HARDING

The tomb of President Harding at Marion, Ohio. Circular in plan with a peripteral colonnade, the stately structure is open to the heavens, admitting a flood of light throughout the day. The material is Georgia Marble.

President Harding and his wife rest beneath a ledger-tomb in the center of a circular lawn, planted with shrubbery, and surrounded by the lofty columnated rotunda. A willow tree stands like a sentinel at the tomb. Henry Hornbostel, Architect. Presbrey-Leland, Builders. •

SCULPTURE ADAPTED TO THE CIVIC MEMORIAL

The ancient Greek stele was often used as a cenotaph in memory of soldiers who fell on foreign fields. The stele has been resourcefully adapted in this war memorial. The wings of the angel symbolizing Peace form the crest or anthemion ornament. An inspiring quotation from Woodrow Wilson is inscribed on the shaft. PL23945 for the Township of Little Falls, New Jersey.

The late Henry Bacon often collaborated with his noted contemporary, Daniel Chester French in producing some of the outstanding commemorative works of their time. While much of the work of these two famous artists was confined to public structures of another field, the services of Presbrey-Leland were often employed for the production and erection of cemetery or civic memorials. A noted example is the Lafayette Monument in Brooklyn, here illustrated. The perfect harmony between architecture and sculpture that distinguished all their work, is immediately apparent. PC5187.

WAR AND CIVIC MEMORIALS

Another adaptation of the pillar of victory is the war memorial at Arlington, New Jersey. Here again the American ideal of Peace is emphasized, instead of war, by the attitude of the statue and an inspiring quotation concerning war against war. Three bas-reliefs depicting scenes in the World War are carved on the shaft. PL-17652.

Beneath this monument of the shrine-like temple form, at Bardstown, Kentucky, rests the inventor of the steamboat, John Fitch. The bas-relief in bronze depicting Fitch at work on his model was reproduced from a mural in the Capitol at Washington. Elbert McGran Jackson, sculptor. Designed and executed for the War Department. PL-22748.

The Leif Ericsson Memorial at Reykjavik, presented to the people of Iceland by the United States of America on the 1000th Anniversary of the Althing (Parliament), is the work of A. Stirling Calder, celebrated sculptor. The heroic statue of the explorer, who discovered Vinland, and the huge prow-shaped pedestal which supports it, were erected in Iceland under the personal supervision of the general superintendent of construction for the company. PL28140.

THE HISTORIC AND MILITARY MEMORIAL

The Borough of Bogota, N. J. wisely sought to erect a tribute to its heroes of World War II that would be adequate, dignified and appropriate to the spirit of the times. Presbrey-Leland was chosen to design and produce this effective memorial of contemporary design, which was furnished in a granite of warm pink cast, and erected in a quiet setting dedicated to the memory of men and women of the Armed Forces who were lost in the service of their country. Note the significance with which the Sword, symbolic of the constant strife for Freedom, is prominently displayed, yet dominated by the commemorative laurel carving, and the inspiring vertical lines of the pedestal. PL47228.

The civic life of the late Alfred Emanuel Smith was such as to make almost inevitable the erection of a fitting memorial, supported by popular donation, and reared in an area which the Governor himself had referred to as the Old Neighborhood. Engaged by the eminent architectural firm of Eggers and Higgins, Presbrey-Leland was proud to participate in the production of this shrine to one of New York's greatest sons.

THE "AL" SMITH MEMORIAL

The talented Charles Keck, engaged to model the heroic figure of "Al" Smith, caught the spirit and character of the man in the remarkable portrait shown above. Here on the reverse surface of the die, is a huge bronze casting of a typical scene in the life of the Happy Warrior. The spirit engendered in the hearts of his followers, particularly the youth of the nation, is reflected—inadequately, perhaps,—in this fitting tribute to the great humanitarian, so warmly loved by all New York. PL43476.

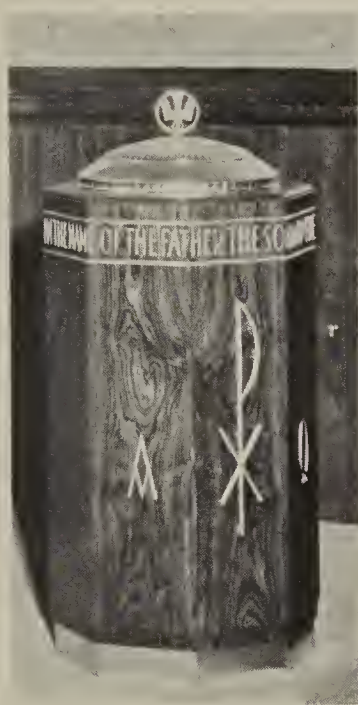

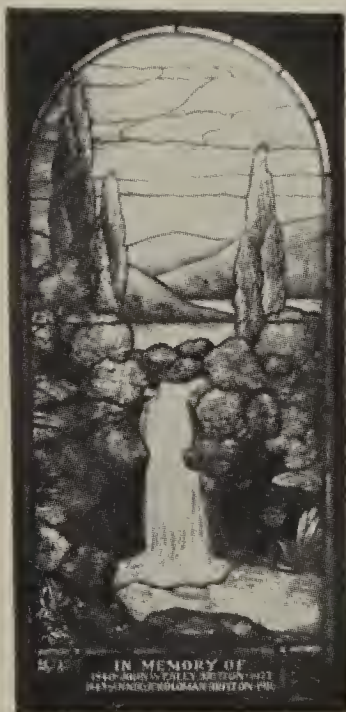

INDOOR MEMORIALS AND COMMEMORATIVE TABLETS

JUST as we commemorate, in our cemeteries, the resting place of those we have loved who are gone before, so likewise are we prompted to honor their activities in life—their service to God and humanity—by placing memorials in churches and other institutions. Obviously, these indoor memorials should harmonize with the architecture and function of the building in which they are placed. Presbrey-Leland designers are trained in the styles and refinements of architecture; and they excel in creating significant and appropriate mural tablets, memorial windows and other indoor memorials in marble, slate, bronze, glass and similar media. Some typical examples of commemorative tablets and memorial windows by Presbrey-Leland are illustrated on these pages. Information concerning values, together with expert counsel and preliminary sketches, may be obtained upon request.

Memorial windows in Presbrey-Leland mausoleums range in design from simple geometric patterns to highly decorative landscapes and inspiring religious themes—the work of artisans who are schooled in the finest traditions of the glass worker's art. Typical of Presbrey-Leland's entrance into allied fields is the baptismal font, designed to harmonize with the spirit of the church in which it was erected commemoratively.

Commemorative Tablets by Presbrey-Leland are done in bronze, marble, slate and other media—the original creations of trained architectural designers.

The Swindells Memorial Carillon, designed by Presbrey-Leland, was erected in Hillcrest Memorial Park Cemetery, Springfield, Mass. Towering to a total height of 105 feet, the graceful structure supports a carillon of 25 bells imported from England, the largest bell weighing 3,000 pounds. Rich in architectural detail and symbolical carvings, this magnificent tower typifies the service Presbrey-Leland offers to cemetery executives and others interested in cemetery structures and gateways. PL33186 for Frederick Swindells, Esq., of Rockville, Conn.

CEMETERY STRUCTURES

THE landscape beauty of modern cemeteries, with their perpetual endowment and expert supervision, has encouraged public spirited citizens to contribute memorial chapels and other structures. Registered architects on the staff of Presbrey-Leland design memorial gateways, chapels, fountains, receiving tombs, and public mausoleums. This trained architectural talent together with the facilities of the Presbrey-Leland shops and construction equipment insure, at reasonable cost, that beauty of design and structural permanence so essential to cemetery buildings and adornments.

The Trustees of Fairmount Cemetery, Newark, N. J., commissioned Presbrey-Leland to design and erect this imposing public mausoleum, which involved an expenditure of $1,254,000. One of the finest of such structures in America, it is designed to provide for 3,350 interments, with 1,000 additional niches for cinerary urns. The entire exterior is of granite; the interior polished marble. The mosaics in the chapel were the work of Carlo Ciampaglia. PL 23300

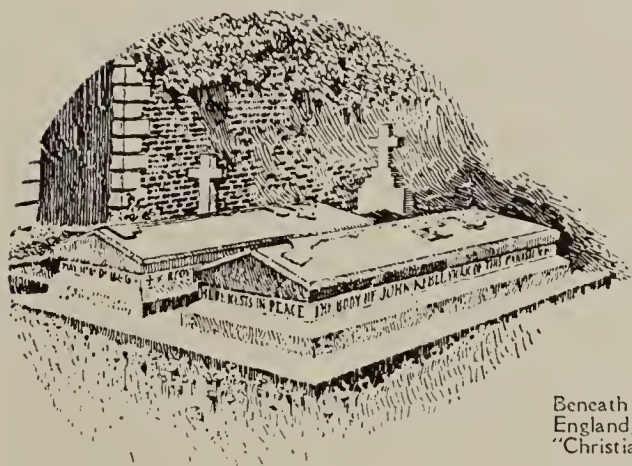

Unique in the experience of Presbrey-Leland is the donation and dedication of a section of Mt. Olivet Cemetery, Frederick, Maryland, to the War dead, and the erection of a fitting monument to their honor. Financed completely by the cemetery company, a new and admirable note of consideration is sounded in the planning and development of this worthy project. Conceived in the spirit of contemporary design, this effective ensemble consists of twin pylons bearing gold stars, and a recumbent octagon upon the surface of which have been recorded the names of the commemorated. PL43936 designed and erected for Mt. Olivet Cemetery Company, Frederick, Md.

CEMETERY STRUCTURES

It may be fitting that the illustration on this final page depicts an example of the entry of Presbrey-Leland into a field somewhat apart from its primary concern. For, while the design and production of cemetery memorials occupies the major share of its talents and resources, it is also true that activity in any field allied to the memorial industry is welcomed, and that those seeking assistance with such matters may find the very qualities for which they have been striving. Here, for example, the charming individuality of the entrance gate to Walnut Grove Cemetery, in Meriden, Connecticut, bespeaks a native receptivity to the challenges posed by problems beyond commercial realms. Often the cost is little if any greater than that of a stereotyped counterpart. PL27733.

'TIS SWEET, AS YEAR BY YEAR WE LOSE FRIENDS OUT OF SIGHT, IN FAITH TO MUSE HOW GROWS IN PARADISE OUR STORE. JOHN KEBLE.

Beneath this recumbent tomb in the churchyard at Hurley, England, lies all that is mortal of John Keble, author of the "Christian Year."
